DR. TURK'S PHILOSOPHY

'Ve Gett Too Soon Oldt
 And Too Late Schmaridt'

Dr. R. D. Turk, professor of veterinary medicine, likes to lean back in his office chair now and then and gaze at a wall plaque which reads:

"Ve gett too soon oldt
 And too late schmaridt"

Such sage, English-German word trifling very nearly sums up the philosophy of the long-time educator and head of the Department of Veterinary Parasitology. Over the years, he has learned in his dealings with the complexities of science, research and students that there is so much to learn in so short a period of time.

Yet, if there is anyone who has scratched the rock-hard surface of animal parasitology, it's Dr. Turk. His knowledge and research in this field of veterinary science are widely known in the United States.

As for his ability as a teacher, just ask any of his former students. They have come away from his classes with their heads full of data on external and internal parasites, pleasant memories of his humor, and a healthy respect for his disciplines.

Dr. Turk's students know him especially for his Ozarkian definitions and pop quizzes which pop too often to suit them.

To learn the background of this educator's knowledge and outlook on life, go back about 59 summers when he was born near the little town of Ash Grove in the Missouri Ozarks. There, he and five other brothers and sisters were raised under humble circumstances.

"My dad had 20 acres, six kids and not much else," Dr. Turk recalls. "I was kept plenty busy milking cows and cutting stove wood. No time for devilment or pool sharking."

He got his first crack at real animal doctoring by hanging around a veterinarian neighbor. The youngster's father often had trouble rousing him out of bed for morning chores, mostly because the vet-to-be sat up half the night before with a sick mule.

Came high school graduation, young Turk quit the family nest to see what the outer world offered. It wasn't too friendly.

"Yes sir, I set out to set the world on fire, but I ran out of matches."

In 1933, he was graduated with high honors from Kansas State Agricultural College (now Kansas State University) with a degree in veterinary medicine.

The year was 1936 and his job was as assistant veterinarian under Dr. H. Schmidt at Texas A&M. In 1944, Dr. H. L. Van Bolkenberg died, and Dr. Turk was appointed head of the Department of Veterinary Parasitology.

The doctor's work has carried him into each of Texas' 254 counties.

"And I've been stuck on nearly every sand road in East Texas," he added.

During those early days with the college, he ran into many kinds of animal ailments. He encountered deadly anthrax along the Gulf Coast, and he helped clean up the last strongholds of the famed Texas fever tick.

Dr. Turk's current teaching activities are focused on parasitology for second-year veterinary students. In addition to the scientific and technical side of his lectures, he makes a special effort to condition students for actual practice.

Nineteen Wives Clubs were represented last night at the Aggie Wives Council Meeting. Order of business included a letter to the Athletic Council concerning the price of wives tickets for A&M athletic events; a discussion on the possibility of small clubs combining their social activities to encourage a large attendance; an announcement that the Memorial Student Center Bowling Lanes will have special rates for wives clubs on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. Also Mrs. Jean Vaught will represent the Aggie Wives Council at the Cotton Pageant on April 7.

The Petroleum Engineering Wives Club will hold its next meeting for both husbands and wives. This meeting is scheduled for March 19 at 7:45 p. m. in Room 211 of the W. T. Doherty Building. Lyndon Taylor, a graduate student, will present an illustrative talk on communism. Members are urged to bring guests.

The Chemical Engineering Wives Club will meet at Congdon's Bakery Wednesday night at 7:30. All faculty wives are invited to attend also.

A Tupperware Party is planned for the Electrical Engineering Wives Club next Monday night at 8 in the lounge of the Electrical Engineering Building. This will be an open meeting and guests will be welcomed.

Kraft's Furniture Store in Bryan will host the Agricultural Economics and Sociology Wives Club next Monday evening at 7:30.
