Voters End Campaign At Polls Saturday...

WILL WE DEVELOP THE NEUTRON

BOMB

Scientists have conceived the deadliest weapon yet — the neutron bomb. Its rays would destroy life — yet leave property untouched. Science writer William Lawrence says it's impracticable, costly and may never be built. Yet U.S. Sen. Dodd says: "It can be built." Get all the facts about the N-bomb in this week's Saturday Evening Post. ALSO: Read "Backstage With Andy Williams" and watch his TV Special on NBC, Friday night — 8:30 P. M. Eight Men Attracted Into Governor Race

(Editor's Note: Because of Saturday's upcoming political primaries, The Battalion is pleased to present this two-page summary of both state and local campaigning. We regret that space requirements prohibit further material, but urge all qualified student voters to take advantage of their opportunity either here or in their hometowns Saturday.)

By ALAN PAYNE
Battalion Editor

It all ends Saturday! One of Texas' most active political campaigns, a massive thing that began back last winter and has blossomed with the coming of spring, comes to a climactic end

Saturday when nearly a million and a half voters will trek to the polls to vote in both Democratic and Republican primaries.

Campaigning for state-wide positions has left little to the imagination as over 50 candidates have spanned the Lone Star State several times in quest of voters.

Most interest and participation has doubtless been given the race for Texas' governorship, where five Democrats and two Republicans are challenging three-time state leader Price Daniel.

Facing Daniel, who is seeking an unprecedented fourth term in office, are Democrats Will Wilson, Marshall Formby, Don Yarborough, John Connally and Edwin A. Walker, and Republicans Jack Cox and Roy Whittenberg.

Therefore, the Republican winner will face the victor of a June 2 Democratic run-off election, in next fall's general election. There is little possibility of an outright Democratic winner in Saturday's primary.

Issues in the governor's race have taken many shapes and forms, with the following probably most prominent.

Price Daniel

Daniel has been emphasizing the success of his previous terms, plus the chance to complete all of his projects during a fourth term.

He has called his most important issue the passage of a ten-point law enforcement program. The proposed program would include stronger criminal laws, additional curbs on narcotics and bar-biturates and stronger controls on lobbyists.

Don Yarborough

Probably the most liberal candidate, Yarborough has called leadership and education his primary issues in the race. He says the fundamental issue is whether Texas "is going to obtain the quality of leadership necessary to meet the challenge of the '60's."

In education, he proposes to use the $14 billion now used on research for scientific and technological advances.

John Connally

Connally has also campaigned for better leadership, plus a more positive economic program.

He has gone on record as opposing Daniel's reelection because of the present 86 million state deficit.

Marshall Formby

Formby in his campaign has also emphasized the need to put the state on a cash basis. He has called the most important issue, however, "whether Texans will elect a governor who will not be dominated by Lyndon B. Johnson and his gang."

His economic proposals are based on what he calls a need to attract more industry to the state.

Will Wilson

Wilson has campaigned against both Connally and Daniel, accusing Connally of federal connections and Daniel of holding excessive power.

He has also campaigned vigorously for a one per cent, anti-the-board sales tax.

Edwin A. Walker

Walker, the well-known former Army general, has called Texas solvency the primary campaign issue. "Insolvency is the most destructive force by which any government can be surrounded," he has said.

The retired general has criticized "the higher echelon government" for usurping individual rights.

Jack Cox

Cox, who ran a respectable second to Daniel in 1960, has called balancing the state's budget the most important campaign issue.

He also seeks better Texas industry, roads and schools, and these things are possible through "productivity—or working in a climate of freedom."

Roy Whittenberg

A newspaper publisher, Whittenberg has campaigned primarily for the election, rather than the appointment, of federal judges.

He also has criticized the U.S. program of foreign aid, citing Cuba and Venezuela have failed to support U. S. policy in receiving food grains and oil, respectively.
