Saturday—★★★"The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance" and ★★"Houseboat" and ★★"Where the Boys Are" "Liberty Valance" stars James Stewart as the hero, John Wayne as the Hero, and Vera Miles as the—you guessed it—heroine. Everybody's much too brave, a la typical western movie; but a new twist ending makes a near save. "Houseboat" contains Cary Grant, Sophia Loren and No Plot. "Boys Are"—previously reviewed.

Sunday through Tuesday—★★★"Satan Never Sleeps" William Holden, a long way from "Picnic," portrays a priest with a non-theologically-minded waif (France Nuyen) on his...well...his hands. Group Endorses 'Non-Ethnic' Policy

Editor,
The Battalion:
We wish to state that we heartily agree with the sentiments that there be "elimination of mention of ethnic affiliation in nothing constructive can be accomplished by the reference" in news reporting as expressed by the letter from the A&M Methodist Church, which appeared in The Battalion April 26.

The present policy of some of the area news media of giving the ethnic affiliation tends to label an ethnic group with the actions of a particular member of that group.

The elimination of racial or ethnic "labels" for American citizens will bear witness to the basic American belief in an equal opportunity for every citizen, regardless of his skin color.

Lights On After Silver Taps

Editor,
The Battalion:
We would like an answer to one question. Why were all the street lights turned on immediately after Silver Taps?

It is evident that the majority of the students do not regard Silver Taps with reverence, as they once did, but this is something that must come from the individual.

The point which we are trying to make is that someone, other than an Aggie, decided to alter one of the few traditions which had previously remained unchanged. We like to believe that it remained unchanged because enough Aggies wanted it that way.

Why then has this tradition now been changed?

Millions Of West Germans Live In Fear Of Russians

By J. M. ROBERTS
Associated Press News Analyst
Millions of people in West Germany saw the Russians come into Germany's eastern territories in 1945, never want to see them again, and many of them live in a constant nagging fear, sometimes aggravated into a belief, that an Allied backdown will eventually open the door once more.

Versation of Soviet "fright flights" in the Berlin corridors, coupled with various statements that the talks in Geneva did something to ease if not settle the Berlin dispute, appears to have revived this feeling.

There is nothing readable on the cards to support it, nothing in the fundamental situation to suggest any need for it, and nothing but denials from Allied authorities.

Relaxation of tensions is a valid basis for fear.

The best the United States expects to get out of all the discussion with the Soviets at Berlin is a tacit, de facto mutual understanding that their side had better push situation too far. Positive agreements on new or changed conditions has not been and is not expected.

The Soviet Union will continue to think up ways of trying to make young Berliners of the wisdom of starting out there if they can get away from trying to frighten both man and foreign investment in the city.

Whether the more dangerous forms of harassment will continue depends upon momentary circumstances. But the Soviet Union now they are not going to get the city, or get the best out of it, through physical pressure.

The Allied position is exemplified in the beefed up military posture already assumed. President Kennedy has repeated an overwhelming Soviet armed force trying to overrun Western Europe will be stopped by atomic bombs if no other way.

The Soviet Union has problems even as the United States has problems. Neither wants to push the other into an irrevocable conflict. The minute the Soviet Union becomes too much involved in Europe she will begin to lose influence in Asia which is seriously threatened.

The United States has problems in Asia, also, and in the Western Hemisphere.

Brazos Included In Huge Request For Water Funds

WASHINGTON (AP)—Texans asked Congress Thursday for millions to finance water projects.

They appeared before a House Appropriations subcommittee. Most requests supported Budget Bureau recommendations to continue projects already started.

Brazos River watershed witnesses sought $17 million for Proctor Reservoir on the Leon River and $20 million for Stillhouse Hollow Dam on the Lampasas River. Both streams flow into the Brazos.

The budget bureau has recommended $4.6 million for work on Househollow Dam.

In the Brazos watershed group, joined by Rep. W. R. Poage and Omar Burleson, were Frank Mayborn, W. B. Pitts and H. K. Dodgen, all of Temple; Mayor Ted Connell of Killeen; Mayor P. R. Cox of Harker Heights; Bell County Judge Raymond Thornton and Roy Sanderford, both of Belton; Jim Flynn of Waco; Dick Harbin of Dublin and Mayor T. D. Craddock of Hamilton.

A. M. Willis Jr., of Longview and Rep. Lindley Beckworth supported a Budget Bureau recommendation of $95,000 for a study of the Sabine River and tributaries and $75,000 for a similar study of the Neches River and tributaries, to determine what improvements would be justified.

Dale Miller, vice president of the Louisiana-Texas Coastal Canal Association, backed navigation improvements for the Gulf Coast and to support funds for the canal.

He asked the committee to approve money to start deepening the canal channel along the 300 miles between New Orleans and Houston. No amounts were specified.
