SMU To Publish New Magazine

At SMU a new student magazine called "Espejo" is to be published next fall.

With its first issue expected to go to press sometime in November, the magazine is not to be considered an exclusively "literary" publication. In addition to original poetry, fiction and drama, the magazine will publish original art work, such as woodcuts and line engravings and will include essays and symposia on topics and issues of significance in various areas.

"Espejo" (Spanish for 'mirror') will be devoted to the search for truth and beauty," said faculty advisor Dr. Laurence Perrine. "It will reflect these values as they exist in the minds of SMU students."

The "SMU Campus," the student newspaper, listed the high points of the ending school year. They were:

Oct. 7, SMU defeats Air Force.
Oct. 28, SMU defeats Texas Tech.

Dec. 2, SMU ties TCU.

Feb. 21, "Campus" editor recall election fails. Hewitt gets 69 per cent vote to stay temporarily in office.

Mar. 6, basketball team ties Tech for championship.

Apr. 17, panty raid on women's dorm draws 1,000 spectators, eight later suspended for spectating too close.

UT Competition Pits Services

At the University of Texas the ninth annual interservice drill team competition between units of the Army, Navy and Air Force ROTC units was held Saturday.

The Navy's Buccaneers, the Army's Rangers and the Air Force's Orange Wing units competed.

Arkansas Stops Political Speakers

At the University of Arkansas, student representatives met with members of the University administration concerning a Board of Trustees' ruling that bans political candidates from the campus.

The administration officials said that the board has approved only a general policy concerning the use of university facilities. The administration has the responsibilities of implementing the policy and intends to clarify the procedures and conditions under which university facilities can be used, a spokesman said.

INTERPRETING

West New Guinea Future In Doubt

By J. M. ROBERTS
Associated Press News Analyst

American officials are convinced the crisis between The Netherlands and Indonesia over West New Guinea is about over, but you can get just about as many opinions as there are observers as to the future of the new nation.

The Dutch presence there has become unprofitable. Its cession to Indonesia now seems to be a matter of letting the Dutch government out gracefully—something which President Sukarno is not eager to do, but probably will do to avoid the onus of violence.

There are indications that he does not wish to create an unstable situation at home which might put him in the same relation to his Communist constituents as Fidel Castro of Cuba.

Sukarno is still the boss in Indonesia—with the aid of an army to which he gives sufficient power to check any too-forward Communist activities.

For their part, the Indonesian Communists are playing a game which has been played before, elsewhere, as in France and Italy and some other European countries immediately after World War II.

In Asia the pattern has been for the establishment of cadres, and recruiting for guerrilla action as preliminary to control of villages and eventual establishment of footholds in governments.

In Indonesia there has been greater emphasis on a more subtle phase of Communist tactics. That is the tactic of creating production troubles in industry and disruption of commerce, forcing governments to go adventuring into various forms of nationalization, spreading Socialist practices which the Reds see as the last step before arrival at universal communism.

The question is whether Sukarno will emerge from the Dutch dispute with enhanced support by the army—as he should—and whether he believes American economic aid will be offered under a true application of the new policy of full recognition for neutralism.

Texas Highways Best In Nation

By TEX EASLEY
Associated Press Special Service
WASHINGTON—Any way you want to look at it, Texas leads in the big interstate highway program.

Highway Administrator Rex M. Whitton, in a recent appearance before the House Public Works Committee, submitted figures showing by states the progress of the program as of Jan. 1.

Texas, with 3,024 miles, leads all states in the number of miles designated as a part of the system. It also was first among all states in each of these categories showing the status of the 15-year program which got underway five years ago:

Now open to traffic, 988 miles; under various stages of engineering and construction, 1,348 miles; remaining to be built, 688 miles.

Ranking second to Texas in miles designated is California, with 2,177, of which only 293 miles remains to be put under construction.

Whitton, a Missourian with close friends in Texas—including State Highway Engineer Dewitt C. Greer and Frank Scrivner, A&M professor—also submitted figures showing what Texas and other states would get in fiscal 1964 (starting July 1, 1963), under pending legislation.

The measure would authorize $950 million for regular federal-aid projects, as compared with $925 million for the fiscal year starting July 1, 1962.

The interstate system is financed on a pay-as-you-go method through increased gasoline taxes.

Rep. Jim Wright, D-Tex., member of the Public Works subcommittee on roads, was the chief advocate of the pay-as-you-go method of financing.

Texas would receive $55.3 million out of the federal funds proposed to be appropriated for allocation in fiscal 1964. The states match this on a 50-50 basis.

Of the total proposed for Texas, $25.8 million would be spent on primary highways, $16.4 million on secondary highways, and $13.1 million on urban highways and roads.
