Library Is Seeking Ideas Of Faculty

Suggestions for facilities and service which might be considered in planning a major addition to Cushing Library are being sought from the A&M faculty.

In the proposal stage is a large addition to be constructed to the rear of the present building, extending all of the way to the Texas Engineers Library.

"This is your Library, and every effort is being made to plan a building that will serve your needs and those of your students in the finest way possible," a statement issued by the Faculty Library Committee says, in part. Any suggestions concerning the Library program as a whole also are sought. All suggestions should be

EVEN LIVING COSTS

Magazine Writer Urges Pay For College Students

Special To The Battalion

NEW YORK-Dr. Margaret Mead proposes that all college students be paid salaries for performing their school work. She said they should no longer be financially penalized for the time they spend studying; time during which their less intelligent, ambitious or creative contemporaries are earning money and gaining experience in their chosen fields.

Writing in the June issue of Redbook, on newsstands next Tuesday, Miss Mead deplored the custom of making college students "suffer now for what they may be able to do later."

She does not consider "free" education sufficient, since it does not account for the student's living costs. She cites the fact that one third of the young people who are clearly college material do not go to college, and maintains that the reason for this is their unwillingness to either go on being supported by their parents, or to scrimp along on the money they can earn at part time jobs which actually interfere

"Higher education for as many is not a luxury but a necessity "The time has come when what college students are doing should be recognized as work . . . paid

As for methods of financing college students, Miss Mead

"How would we finance a program of salaries for qualified college students? The same way we finance other necessary services - by public funds through taxes and by private funds from individuals and foundations. Education for those who are being trained for the careers recognized as most directly useful to society-doctors, teachers, nurses, engineers - would most logically be financed out of public funds.

"Because we are a country with a mixed economy, where private initiative and private generosity supplement our taxsupported activities, some of the education for other kinds of careers and for students who need a longer time to think, to experiment, to explore, might be privately underwritten.

"But all students should be paid for doing useful work, no longer treated as a dependent, group who ought to be supported, domineered over, made to sufof our young people as possible fer now for what they may be able to do later. Nor should they in a society that needs ever more be treated as a group who must high-level skills," she writes. work twice as hard in order to pay for something for which they should in fact themselves be
