Election Treats Women OK; Females Now Sheriff, Judge

DALLAS (AP)—Texas women fared well in the general election. One became a county judge—perhaps the first Republican female county judge in state history.

Another was elected sheriff. Several were returned to other county offices.

Barbara G. Culver got into the race for judge of Midland County because she was "interested in getting a two-party system started." The attractive 36-year-old mother of two boys defeated incumbent Noel D. Cason 6,949 to 6,769. Mrs. Culver and her husband, John R. Culver, are practicing Midland attorneys.

Virginia Shivers won the office of sheriff of Aransas County by 11 votes in a write-in election. She is the widow of the late Sheriff Shivers who died Oct. 12 while running unopposed for reelection. Mrs. Shivers defeated Jim Adams, a grocer, 363 to 352.

AMONG THE PROFS English Teachers To Attend Meet

Seven English professors Saturday will attend the annual District I Workshop of the Texas Joint English Committee in Houston. They will be continuing A&M's participation in a statewide high school and college program that was created by the late Dr. T. F. Mayo, longtime English professor here.

Thirteen districts across Texas hold similar one-day programs for high school and college teachers of English. In the spring a state meeting is attended by two persons from each district.

Purpose of the program is to bring high school and college teachers together to hear papers and discuss teaching problems, according to Dr. Fred E. Ekfelt. He serves this year as program chairman of the District I workshop.

The program scheduled Saturday on the University of Houston campus will be attended by high school and college teachers from a wide area of Southeastern Texas. Last year the workshop was held here with approximately 300 persons attending.

This year Dr. J. Gordon Eaker of the University of Houston is general chairman, succeeding Ekfelt. High school and college teachers hold various posts.

Representing A&M in Houston will be: Dr. Lee J. Martin, Dr. Harrison E. Hierth, Dr. John Q. Hays, Allen Schrader, Louis F. Hauer, Dr. Robert W. Barzak and Ekfelt.

A group of faculty members will participate in the program of the 15th annual Advisory Conference on Teacher Education in Dallas next week.

The conference, composed of college faculty members and public school superintendents, is an advisory group to the Texas Education Agency on teacher certification.

"Upgrading Standards for Preparing Teachers" is the announced theme of the conference, opening

Sunday night and ending Tuesday.

A research report on teaching standards for school administrators and school business officials will be the main area of discussion at the conference.

Scheduled to attend from Austin are: Pat Sullivan and Dr. Paul Hensarling of the Department of Education and Psychology; Dr. H. Groneman of the Department of Industrial Education and Coordinator of the A&M Center for Teacher Education; Dr. O. H. Smith of the Department of Agricultural Education; and Dr. Carl L. Smith of the Department of Health and Physical Education.

Dr. Harlan E. Smith, plant pathologist for the Agricultural Extension Service since October, has resigned effective Friday. He has accepted the position of pathologist with the Federal Extension Service in Washington, D.C.

In commenting upon the resignation, Extension Director John Hutchison said: "Dr. Smith has done a standing job since joining our staff and we regret very much his wish him well in his new assignment. He has become well known over the state and has provided our county workers with much valuable information on plant diseases and their control."

Smith also had charge of the Plant Disease Diagnostic Laboratory.

Smith is a native of Arkansas and holds a BS degree from the University of Arkansas and a PhD from the University of Wisconsin. He has also attended the Universities of Oklahoma and Colorado.

In addition to his work as pathologist, he will also have responsibilities in connection with nematology and agricultural chemicals.
