100 Prep FFAers Will Tour Campus

Approximately 100 high school Future Farmers of America members will tour A&M facilities Saturday.

Herman Brown, instructor in the Department of Agricultural Education, said the courtesy corps committee of the Collegiate FFA Chapter, will conduct the tour.

Vocational agriculture teachers from throughout the state have been invited to bring their students. Purpose of the tour is to show students the latest advances in agriculture and assist them in selection of a career in agriculture.

Postmaster Gregg Urges Early Local Holiday Mailing

Very few things are cheaper in this day and age than they were 45 years ago—but air mail still is, Postmaster Ernest Gregg said Friday.

On Jan. 7, when the air mail rate goes up a penny to 8¢ an ounce, this service to the American people will be in its 45th year, he noted.

At Christmas time, air mail can be particularly important, Gregg noted. For example, he said, late cards sent by air mail can reach Chicago from College Station in less than eight hours; and Key West, Fla., in eight hours.

Petroleum Engineering Shortage Cited

A serious manpower shortage is developing in petroleum engineering, a professor said here Thursday.

Robert L. Whiting, professor and head of the Department of Petroleum Engineering, said undergraduate enrollment in petroleum engineering is at an all-time low, according to a survey he has made in accredited departments throughout the nation.

Less than 200 petroleum engineering seniors will graduate in 1963 to fill the average requirement of 600 new engineers needed each year, he said in a report to the Society of Petroleum Engineers.

Whiting's survey was made in the 21 accredited petroleum engineering departments in U. S. colleges and universities.

HIS SURVEY shows that petroleum engineering graduates are receiving multiple job offers and that starting salaries are at an all-time high.

Reports from the 21 departments indicate that all petroleum engineering students in good academic standing are able to secure summer employment in the oil industry while attending college. At the same time, scholarship opportunities at the junior and senior level are going unclaimed.

"Recognizing the need for encouraging more young men to enter the field to supply the nation's need for petroleum engineering graduates," the A&M department is expanding its scholarship program to include freshmen and sophomores. Twenty scholarships of $200 each for the academic year are being made available to qualified students, Whiting said.
