Group At Rice Asks Integration

Rice University's Board of Governors asked last week for changes in the school's charter to permit the admission of Negroes.

In a district court suit, the board also asked for permission to charge a "reasonable tuition." Even if the suit is approved this semester, integration at the university on the undergraduate level probably will not take place next year. The school's president, Dr. K. S. Pitzer, has already announced that no tuition will be charged next year under any circumstances.

A Rice spokesman said that if integration is approved, it will not apply only to classrooms, but to "all areas," including residence and athletics.

TCU Museum May Be Lost

The proposed university museum at TCU may be doomed after the school's Board of Trustees Building and Grounds Committee rejected the proposal because of excessive expense, oldstyle architecture on the proposed building and the fact that the museum would be only for historical relics.

The proposal had been to bring the original building of AddRan Male and Female College, a forerunner of TCU, from its location at Thorp Spring in Johnson County to the campus. A Worth Hills Golf Course site was under consideration.

A 30-member museum steering committee is still meeting in hopes of completing negotiations for the new building.

Faculty At Texas Wants JC Election

Petitions in Austin calling for an election to create a junior college in Travis County have been signed by more than 200 University of Texas faculty members, as well as over 3,000 county resi-

Approximately 85 per cent of the campus was covered with one campus petition.

The plan to create a local junior college has been prompted by business and industrial interests in Austin who have expressed a need for high school graduates with additional technical training on the college level.

The election being proposed would create a junior college district to be operated and financed by the county.

SERVICEMEN 'DOWNRIGHT UNHAPPY'

Pay Hike Criticized

The proposed 14.4 per cent increase in pay for military servicemen may not be all roses in the eyes of the military. According to a report in Newsweek magazine, many servicemen are bitter about the size of the increase and how it will be distributed. Newsweek's findings:

"The armed forces are downright unhappy with Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara's new pay bill proposing an average 14.4 per cent increase—at a cost of $900 million more in fiscal 1964 added to the $12 billion annual military payroll. The cost of the pay boost, beginning Oct. 1, would rise to more than $1.2 billion in later years. "They keep nibbling away at our pay and privileges until we're second-class citizens," gritted a Navy petty officer at Norfolk. "Talk about segregation! What do you think they are doing to What worries many professional military men is that the serviceman's status is declining not only below professional, technical and management personnel in industry, but below Civil Service.

A reflection of the erosion in the prestige of military service of hostile mines." was disclosed in a recent Defense Department opinion survey. Teenagers ranked military officers, with college professors in 4th place on a list of nineteen occupations, but equated enlisted men in 14th place with bookkeepers and mailmen. Adults rated officers in 7th place between gradeschool teachers and farmers, put enlisted men near the bottom, with garage mechanics and bar-

Editor. The Battalion:

Your editorial of Feb. 28 calling for some understanding of the traditions that led to the fight in Gregory Gym showed a level of sagacity rarely manifest in the college press.

State newspapers have kindled the UT-Aggie rivalry by choosing to sensationalize the Texan editorial which requested the abolition of A&M. Even though the logic in our editorial was sound (essentially, that the philosophies of military conformity and free education are antithetical), it was extreme. Both the newspaper accounts and the letters we have received, many of them unprintable, were also extreme, but they tended to be immoderate and adventitious to the point of being ridiculous. I have seen nothing yet that attacked the main point of the editorial.

Your comments were excellent. Yours is the sort of approach that attempts to solve, rather than create, problems.
