Corrective Action Needed Before Next Cage Season

The Southwest Conference ended another basketball season Thursday—one that may be best remembered not for the quality of basketball displayed, but for the distinct failing in sportsmanship display on at least three occasions.

During a season when Texas compiled one of the league's best records ever and while Bennie Lenox and Kendall Rhine engaged in one of the hottest scoring duels, must conference publicity was devoted to the unsportsmanlike conduct of players and fans alike.

Heading the list, of course, would be the Aggie-Texas riot at the game in Austin—a conflict which was publicized all across the country and even in the foreign press. But equally as distasteful were disagreements at the Rice-Texas Tech game in Lubbock and at Tuesday's Texas-Baylor game in Waco. At Lubbock and Waco both, fights broke out on the floor among players. None were hurt in Waco, but several players required care after the Lubbock scrap.

In addition to the actual disagreements, strained relations were noticeable in several other games, including Tuesday's Aggie contest in Houston against Rice when at one point two players squarred off but were quickly separated. And in the Aggie-Rice game in G. Rollie White Coliseum earlier in the season, two players were ejected from the game before a fight could break out.

Unfortunately, disciplinary action of any sort like the ejection of players was seldom used during the season. And technical fouls were also infrequently called.

Maybe such corrective action during the game is not the answer to the SWC's sportsmanship problems, but surely conference officials can see the writing on the wall—relations are strained and some definite steps are going to be desirable before another season begins next year. Another conference season under current conditions would result in only more disputes and fisticuffs.

Hide All Nude Animals

Got a letter from G. Clifford Prout the other day. Prout is president of the Society for Indecency to Naked Animals, and he wanted to let us know that he'll be on campus sometime during March.

Prout inherited $400,000 in 1956 from his father, and by terms of the will, has to spend the entire sum within ten years for improving the moral climate of animals.

To spend the money he formed the society (SINA) and has as his main goal the clothing of naked animals.

SINA's constitution provides: "...members of SINA shall devote their time and energy to clothe all naked animals that appear in public, namely horses, cows, dogs and cats, including any animal that stands higher than four inches or is longer than six inches."

"Nobody realizes what a terrible moral menace naked animals really are," Prout says.

Prout has a corps of SINA members ready to march on the White House now, to protest Mrs. Kennedy's rides with Caroline on nude horses. "SINA has so far ignored this situation because the President's family have been discreet enough to do most of their riding in private," a headquarters bulletin explained.

Currently an essay contest on "Why I Choose To Be A Decent Person" is being sponsored by the organization. The winner will receive an invitation to visit the group's New York office to "observe the typewriters and telephones of SINA in action, warning the world..."

Entries should contain not less than 100 words or more than 10,000 words according to the contest rules.

Prout has declared San Francisco a moral disaster area with over 700,000 naked animals running around loose, and even attacked RCA Victor for showing a naked dog as a trademark.

Prout has linked alcoholism, suicide, juvenile delinquency and adult crime with the sight of naked animals.

SINA claims 50,789 members coast-to-coast, and boasts a Washington lobby to influence animal legislation. Prout says he has 14 "emergency clothesmobiles" spotted around the country to rush to any area where animal morality sags.

When SINA's chief hits Aggield (probably to the tune of his official song "Wings of Decency"), he will no doubt berate students for animal indecency to Reveille, then head for President Rudder with complaints about Ranger.

Prout will most likely put blame for the Ag-UT fracas on the fact that the students had been exposed to Rev's and Bevo's bad influences.

It is clear that G. Clifford Prout is a sensitive man with a desire to help mankind and animal-kind. Students should take his mission in a serious vein and make sure that all naked live-stock are out of sight, and Reveille at least has her blanket on.
