Two A&M Vets Given Internships At NY Animal Center

Two veterinary students have been selected for 14-month internships in New York City's new Animal Medical Center. They are Ben Johnston of Petrolia and Joe G. Peeples of Tehuacana.

The students, graduating seniors, were selected on the basis of academic achievement and the recommendation of professors in the School of Veterinary Medicine. The New York hospital, costing about $6 million, is staffed with some of the nation's outstanding veterinarians in the small animal field.

Ben is the son of W. C. Johnston of Petrolia, and Joe is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Peeples of Tehuacana.

RUSSIANS SEEMED HUMAN

Scientist Reviews Antarctica Studies

The human qualities of the Russians with whom he worked while spending more than four months aboard Russian vessels on research assignments to Antarctica impressed an A&M professor.

"The fellows on the ship were the pioneer type — hard-working, very friendly and very helpful. I have no way of knowing what kind of a cross-section of the Russian people they represented," Dr. Guy A. Franceschini said. A meteorologist, he is an associate professor in the Department of Oceanography and Meteorology.

A woman scientist — two were aboard — impressed Dr. Franceschini by operating personally the large winch used to haul biological specimens aboard the Ob.

"They never discussed politics but talked about scientific and everyday things," Dr. Franceschini said.

A Communist cultural and political officer aboard the Ob staged a weekly meeting with all of the Russians, while the daily newscast from Radio Moscow made much use of such words as "capitalist" and "imperialist."

About a fourth of Antarctica's rugged coastline was covered by the Ob, as it made the rounds in the weeks before winter's grip clamped the southmost continent.

Dr. Franceschini and 18 other scientists returning to the Ob after a trip ashore had a narrow escape.

They traveled in a house-like compartment towed by a crawler-type tractor.

The vehicle crossed the shelf ice above land, made the dangerous descent to the frozen sea ice and started the 12-mile trip out to the Ob.

Hurricane winds whipped the snow until "it was just like being in a bottle of milk." Radar aboard the ship was used to watch the tractor and instructions were radioed to the driver each 10 minutes.

Hours later the vehicle reached the Ob. Huge floodlights aboard the ship pierced the blowing snow enough to guide the scientists to the safety of the ship.

An early breakfast marked the safe arrival of the group.
