Banner Raising, Lowering Gets Mixed Response Here

Maybe we've been misinformed, but we thought it was one of the unwritten laws of American society to show respect for our flag at all times. At least some students here seem to show the same views because a few do stop and wait while Old Glory is raised each morning and lowered later in the day.

During the regular school year, with uniformed Corps members acting as reminders, everyone stops to show respect at these times. But summer is a time for vacations and many apparently feel they can take a vacation from patriotism.

It must be alright, however, because many Corps members now in summer school keep right on walking. Theoretically, they are the ones who set examples.

Of course, a 10-15 second stop to pay respect to our flag and what its stands for is quite an inconvenience. Perhaps this is why some feel justified in ignoring the flag in motion.

Why do any of us bother to stop? We suppose it's just because we're proud of being Americans and of our flag. Maybe we feel some sort of obligation to the thousands who have died for that banner down through the years.

It must be nice to feel pride in more convenient things or nothing at all. And it must be nice for those who don't feel they have any obligation to the flag and what it represents. We envy too our summer representatives from the Corps of Cadets who can be patriotic while in uniform nine months out of the year and then turn it off like a faucet over these three months.

But most of us are going to be old-fashioned and keep on stopping when the occasion arises.

We hope those of you who don't bother to stop will excuse us if we get in the way.

CADET SLOUCH

by Jim Earle

"It might not look like much, but it's air conditioned."

— Sound Off —

(Editor's Note: The following letter was received Wednesday from the "Committee for an All-Male Military Texas A&M." Editor, The Battalion:

The above committee has been formed for the ultimate purpose of "effecting a reversal of the recent decision to abolish our state's only all-male facility at Texas A&M College."

The committee will remain in existence until the reversal has been accomplished by the next legislature, legal proceedings, or voluntarily by the A&M Board of Directors.

We will carry this issue to the people of Texas. The citizens of this state have a right to know why their sons and future generations of young Texas men are now being denied a choice as to the type of institution they can attend. The people of Texas have a right to know why the A&M Board of Directors continue to ignore the Texas House of Representatives which advised the Board, by a vote of 99-22, to reverse their decision.

This committee does not feel that Texas girls will want any part in destroying one of our state's most cherished, traditional institutions. Three separate legal actions will be initiated prior to the Fall semester in an effort to expose limited co-education decision of April 27, as a fraud and as the first step toward destroying the cadet corps at Texas A&M.

Texas A&M College will be preserved as an all-male, military institution.

Prof Edits Guide For Space Math

Jack T. Kent, associate professor of mathematics at A&M, is the author of a technical report to facilitate the computation of planetary objects, including man-made satellites.

Professor Kent, an authority on space science, compiled the set of tables with the IBM 709 computer at the Data Processing Center.

He was assisted by George B. Taack, Jr., Data Processing Center supervisor, and David C. Larson, mathematics student.

The book of tables will provide easier tracking of "spectroscopic and visual binaries and small planetary objects such as asteroids and satellites." The programming technique employed was Fortran, using double precision arithmetic.

The tables were printed directly from magnetic tape by means of the IBM 717 Printer, which has complete error checking facilities.
