'Dutchman On The Brazos' — Sound Off — Tells Warm A&M Story

By DAN LOUIS JR.
Battalion Editor

Good books come from the most unexpected places sometimes. Such is the case of a recent publication called "Dutchman On The Brazos" written by Caesar Hohn, who would come closer to being identified if referred to as Dutch Hohn.

Dutch is remembered by Aggies, young and old alike, as one of the first great gridiron heroes of Texas A&M. However, countless hundred, and probably even thousands, remember Dutch Hohn for his social accomplishments in the great state of Texas.

"Dutchman On The Brazos" is the story of Dutch's life. It is written as his life has been lived, centering around Texas A&M.

The story of a boy who came from an immigrant German family, who never "even had a date, a dance, or nice soft conversation with a girl" until he was 18 years old, who came to A&M to evade the tactics of a marriage minded young lady and then became one of A&M's finest graduates, can be told only as Dutch has told it—in the same language and tone.

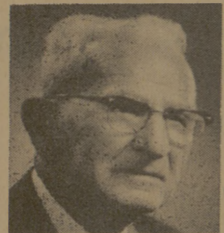

Dutch recalls his pleasures of working with farms and soil rehabilitation and people after receiving his M.A. degree from A&M. Working as ranch manager and later as county agent, Dutch tells how he worked with hardheaded farmers and persuaded them that the "foolishness" of terracing their land would save their soil.

The discussions of A&M, Hohn's day at A&M and his efforts to help worthy boys help themselves through A&M are expressed in a manner that is almost affectionate.

One part of the book which would probably be of interest to all Aggies is where Dutch discusses a trying experience under Coach Charley Moran. Moran had Hohn scrimmaging across from a man who had three years experience and 60 pounds advantage on him.

Hohn writes, "That combination would have been more than enough to subdue me, except for one thing—I had the spirit."

"I would like to pause here and dissect this thing called 'spirit.' I am sure it is something that springs from different wells in different people. One would have to know a lot more about Moran's childhood and his ancestry than I do to tell you what were the ingredients of his spirit. I only know about my own. I had good health, a strong constitution, and a burning desire to identify myself, to earn the respect of my fellow students. I was never altogether sure of myself or of how I would measure up when the crucial test came, but I was determined not to be found wanting. This, I suspect, was the reason why I threw the chunk of liver at a classmate in lab and risked expulsion from the college; and as a result of this same drive I entered, and won, from a fumbling start, the College oratorical contest two years—though frankly the competition here was none too keen. But perhaps the major elements of my spirit was that I liked rough bodily contact, specially with a fellow I envied—as I did all upperclassmen, or anybody who was better off than I was, and in those days it seemed to me that in most ways everybody was better off than I was. And, lastly, I wanted to be a part of the group that wanted to win. I was like the paratrooper General Max Taylor tells about. When the general asked him whether he liked to jump, he said, 'No, sir, but I like to be with people who like to jump.'"

BATTALION EDITORIALS A Real Fresher Upper

Off and running! The Campus Chest drive has a running start at its goal of $5,000, but it's going to be a long run. The students of A&M should pick up the $5,000 goal as a challenge. After all, even though the goal has been set by the student welfare committee of the Student Senate, the campaign itself is a function of the entire student body. There is no reason why the goal should not be reached and passed by the end of next week.

While all of us on campus like to think that we really have to watch the pocket to make ends meet, there is hardly a week goes by that each of us doesn't squander away $1 or more. The $5,000 goal that has been set for this year is probably spent many times each week for cigarettes alone on campus. There is no way to measure how many times this goal could be met with one week's coffee money. A dollar to help an individual in need, especially a fellow Aggie, should be as refreshing as a smoke or a cup.

Editor, The Battalion:
After Tuesday's meeting with Col. Baker, we were vastly enlightened and proud to know that a man of such high calibre is Commandant of the Corps of Cadets.
We now better understand his position as well as that of the school. It is up to the members of the Corps of Cadets as to the role which they will play in the future of Texas A&M.
We are proud to be members of the largest and best military university in the world.

Winner's Talk Called Down

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Academy of Sciences gave Nobel Prize winner Linus Pauling a rap on the knuckles Wednesday for using its centennial meeting as a platform for criticizing the nation's man-to-moon program.
Pauling was called into conference with academy president Frederick Seitz. Afterward he told newsmen he would make no further statements on the moon project now but would do so in detail after he returns to California.
He said Seitz had told him the academy's centennial "is a birthday party and not a forum for a political discussion."
