Take Another Look, Please

It is unfortunate that the Executive Committee was compelled by a University regulation to deny recognition to the Young Democrats and the Young Republicans as official organizations on campus.

We feel that such a regulation does not coincide with the goals of excellence which have been established for A&M University. We feel sure that the people responsible for the regulations which blocked the recognition of the two clubs had no intention of impairing the progress of the University.

If the two clubs have as their purposes to educate themselves—and that is their claim—then we feel that they have a place on the University campus. If the two clubs do not engage in "partisan politics" they would give students interested in the two political parties opportunities to prepare themselves to take a responsible position in the politics of their communities after graduation.

We feel that political clubs on the campus for the purpose of educating their members would be much better for the University than clubs off the campus, which might not be so well kept. We also feel it would be better to have our students meeting on campus, in a University recognized organization, than have the students become engaged in outside organizations which will most definitely become involved in partisan politics.

Members of the Executive Committee, please try to find a place on our campus for our students, even at the cost of revising an unfortunate regulation.

Opened A&M Beat

Daily Texan Editor, David McNeely, paid a visit to the A&M University campus earlier this week.

Reports are that McNeely and an attractive co-ed assistant were here for the purpose of getting a story on the co-ed situation on our campus. McNeely saw fit to interview A&M President Earl Rudder and talk with some students on campus.

Without identifying himself or stating his purpose, McNeely asked to look over the files of The Battalion. His identity was not learned by the lone staff member with whom he talked until he was gone.

The Battalion has been unable to learn just what kind of story McNeely is putting together for his publication.

Sound Off

Editor, The Battalion:

Perhaps the crux of the current crisis at Texas A&M could be found in the phrase, "The West Point of the South." Indeed, it does appear that a dedicated legion of the Aggie exes wish to create this image of Texas A&M.

However these alumni in their memories disregard the fact that Texas A&M is a land-grant college, and not all students have belonged to the Corps. Allow me to suggest that the polite subterfuge in this regard be rationalized thusly: either Texas A&M must become the uncomplimented Military Academy of Texas, or it must take its place among the institutions of higher education in Texas sans this distinction. And, we must not forget that Texas A&M is compared to its contemporaries by prospective collegiates and their parents.

Unfortunately, this challenge can not be equated at an emotional level since there are many facets revealed as the future is considered in context with all the personal and state interests involved. I can not present an unbiased solution to a problem with which I am so closely concerned. But, let me say this, since my enrollment at Texas A&M University, I have been unexpectedly and pleasantly surprised by the "just plain nice" and courteous reception it is my good fortune to acknowledge at this campus.
