Student Senate Moves Real Well

The tone of the Student Senate meeting Thursday night has offered a promise of skillful leadership for the A&M student body during the next semester and a half.

The Senators discussed the items on their agenda in a manner that "gave me confidence in that bunch," said The Battalion's reporter after the meeting.

We feel that the Senate showed foresight that has been lacking in Senates of past years. The group has already made arrangements for the annual 12th Man Bowl, and has begun to discuss programs that reach into the spring semester.

Probably the Senate's foremost effort in its regular meeting was the study of possible situations which might occur with the newly added co-eds on our campus. The group did not bother to discuss the merit of the presence of co-eds on campus, but considered what should be done regarding class rings for the co-eds and what arrangements should be made concerning Silver Taps and co-eds.

The discussion of the two foregoing matters appeared to be completely objective and intended to arrive at the best possible solution to both items. We were happy to learn that the suggestion was made to consult the co-eds on the matters which will be of utmost concern to them.

We are confident that the Senate will be a contributing factor to a workable solution of the matters mentioned above. However, we do encourage students to express their views on these matters to their respective representatives. Only after a student has approached his representative to the Student Senate, can he be assured that his opinion will be a part of any decision.

Rockefeller Starts March After Announcing Intent

NASHUA, N. H. (AP) — Gov. Nelson Rockefeller ignored torrential rain Thursday night to launch his campaign for the Republican presidential nomination amid shopping night throngs in New Hampshire's two largest cities, Nashua and Manchester.

The New York governor, only hours after announcing himself as a presidential contender, shook hands and gave the same greeting over and over again!

"Hiya fella, glad to see you. I'll appreciate your vote."

The governor's performance was reminiscent of the person-to-person handshaking campaign waged by the late Sen. Estes Kefauver, D-Tenn., when he twice won Democratic presidential primaries in New Hampshire.

In Manchester, one of the first to greet the governor was Joseph Myers, city Democratic chairman.

"Confidentially," Rockefeller said, "I got 900,000 votes, from Democrats in New York. If it weren't for them I wouldn't be here now."

The campaign is vital to the Rockefeller cause since New Hampshire holds the nation's first presidential primary next March 10.

Rockefeller formally declared his candidacy in a televised appearance in Albany, N. Y., at 8:30 a.m. He then boarded a plane and flew to Nashua where he repeated the announcement at a news conference.

The governor added he will enter the New Hampshire and California primaries but declined to say for the moment what other primary contests he might consider entering.

Lady Senator Eyes Presidential Bid

By JERRY T. BAULCH WASHINGTON (AP) — Ever since she came to the Senate in 1949 there has been talk—mostly just talk—of Sen. Margaret Chase Smith bidding for her party's nomination for president or vice president. This year she is taking it seriously.

The white-haired Maine Republican is considering entering some primaries next year to offer GOP voters a "third choice" between the two current top contenders, Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York and Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona.

Mrs. Smith's friends concede that perhaps the country is not quite ready to elect a woman president. But they believe that a good showing in the primaries would put her in a strong position to get the vice presidential nomination.

Mrs. Smith, who usually objects to political labels, has described her position as "less liberal than that of Nelson Rockefeller and less conservative than that of Barry Goldwater."

The thing that has nudged Mrs. Smith toward the presidential sweepstakes this year is a heavy flow of mail urging her to run, said her administrative assistant, William C. Lewis Jr.

Mrs. Smith is expected to make her decision known in a speech before the Women's National Press Club here Dec. 5.

Mrs. Smith is a vote getter at least in her home state. She has never lost a political race, is the first woman to serve in both the House and Senate and is the first woman elected to the Senate without first being appointed.

Mrs. Smith spent nine years in the House before coming to the Senate.

Editor, The Battalion: I have been wondering if it is necessary for you to write an editorial for each edition of The Battalion. If it is necessary that you write one each time, I am in sympathy with you in trying to find a topic on which to write. Perhaps if you are having as much trouble finding topics as it seems you are, may I suggest you place a "topic suggestion box" in the public and ask for some help in your time of need. Bill J. Young, '63

Editor's Note: No, Mr. Young, it is not necessary that we have an editorial in each edition of The Battalion, we do so because we want to. And, we do not have trouble finding topics. We feel that a "topic suggestion box" is not necessary, because we presently receive more than ample suggestions for editorial matter, as well as hints on how to run The Battalion. Oh! incidentally, thank you for your suggestion — and your sympathy.
