

Always Good For A Date

For the weekend date, on or off campus, the three-button suit, combining both ivy-league and continental styling, is the standard for after five wear. Available in three or four-piece combinations, it forms the nucleus of a versatile wardrobe.

Belts Adopt Fashion Note
No Longer Utility Items

Belts, which used to be for utility, have taken on a note of fashion. Leading the way is the 1 1/4 inch oil stained harness leather in black, natural, olive, and chuka. Spiced in with these are stretch hemp, English surcingle, and Madras. Cloth covered leather in burgundy, camel, and bottle green, and such geometric patterns reversing to the oil stained leather is the newest innovation in belts. Above all, the wide belts are the ones that are "in." The Norwegian type loafer, along with the saddle cordovan dominate the shoe picture. The traditional plain toe bilcher and long wing-tip cordovan still constitute the basic shoes. A "sleep-er" for the season is the Scots-grained wing tip in black and in tan. This number goes especially well with the Shetland and tweedy look of fall clothing.

Willie Treadway models the new camel blazer that has really become the rage of season. Coordinated with the blazer is a pair of worsted wool trousers (Corbin $20.95) and a striped oxford cloth (Gant $6.95) shirt. The slub stripe silk tie harmonizes with the ensemble.

Chuck McGuire models a cardigan camel colored sweater (Town & King $22.95). The trousers are worsted finish dacron and cotton (Charles Meyers $8.95). The shirt (Gant $6.95) is blue pin stripe. The oil stained harness leather belt is by Canterbury.
