It's Time To Build The All Aggie Bonfire

It's time for the Aggie Bonfire. If you don't believe it is, just take note that the rain that usually accompanies bonfire building is here.

Because it's time for the Aggie Bonfire, that means it's time for about 8,000 students to work as hard as they do anytime during the year. We say 8,000 because this is not an exclusive Corps Bonfire, but it is the traditional Aggie Bonfire—built by all Aggies, burned by all Aggies and intended to represent the burning desire of all Aggies "to beat th' livin' hell out'a TU."

We do not believe that civilians have less desire to build a good bonfire or beat Texas than do the members of the Corps. However, civilian participation in bonfire construction in past years has certainly left something to be desired. The reason for the lack of participation has probably stemmed from lack of organization. At least we think so.

This is not to say that civilian student leaders in the past have not tried to organize their troops. A similar effort, probably with the greatest vigor ever, is being made this year. We lend full support to the civilian organizational plan.

Head Yell Leader Mike Marlow has set aside a special cutting area for civilian students this year. There is no reason why that area can't produce as many logs for the Aggie Bonfire as any other area.

We urge civilian students to band together in ax swinging, log toting, bonfire building crews and set a rapid pace for the Corps to match.

Only 2 Days Left In Campus Chest Drive

The Campus Chest, a program designed to assist Aggies, is presently in need of assistance from Aggies.

Allan Peterson, Student Senate Student Welfare Committee chairman and chairman of the Campus Chest drive, reported Tuesday night that the drive is far short of its $5,000 goal. In fact the collections have not reached the 50 per cent mark. The goal for Campus Chest is often set too high—sometimes this is done intentionally. Therefore, it is understandable that the goal is seldom attained. But really Aggies—less than 50 per cent of a $5,000 goal among more than 8,000 students is just a plain poor effort.

Friday is the deadline for this year's drive. That leaves two full days to "get on the stick."

There are 10 Corps units which have not submitted the first dollar to the Campus Chest. The problem in these cases is pretty apparent. There are some seniors who have failed to get off their dead sides. You fellows know who you are, so get with it.

That leaves one more of the two large groups of Aggies on campus—the civilians. These people are much harder to coordinate, and those responsible for coordinating are not so easily determined as in the case of the Corps. But the dorm presidents cannot be relieved of some of the laxity toward the Campus Chest.

The civilian student, as an individual, must also accept some of the responsibility. The Campus Chest never asks if a man is non-reg or Corps before assistance is given.

Actually it makes little difference to which of the two groups you belong. Regardless if you are of the Corps, non-reg, graduates or undergraduates, reaching the Campus Chest goal is something like beating TU—everyone should want it accomplished.

"I'm not really hurt! This is my outfit's idea to make everyone safety conscious before th' bonfire!"

Sound Off

Editor,
The Battalion:

While College Station is hardly the crossroads of the cosmopolitan world, I would certainly have expected better manners and more understanding than that shown by Mr. Marvin Oehl, '64. When it is painfully apparent that many of the supposedly 14-carat, 100 per cent American students on this campus don't speak grammatical, recognizable English, it seems unreasonable to expect our "foreign students to...

As for casting aspersions on their intelligence or their social desirability! — This only serves to point out Mr. Oehl's lamentable lack in these areas. It is not difficult to imagine him as the personification of the blustering American tourist who manages to insult people in every country he visits by shouting, "Why the hell don't they speak English around here?" Since he can speak nothing else, you might as well accept the, Mr. Oehl — there are other languages in the world, spoken by people more educated and cultured than you or I will ever be. Many of these languages have finer shades of meaning, more philosophic undertones, and so are more suitable for conversation than our own.

These students are also, no doubt, pretty lonely on this campus, and feel a little bewildered by the overwhelming friendliness of people like you. Their own language, in leisure moments, makes them feel just a little less strange. By the way, what languages did your ancestors speak when they got off the boat?

Editor,
The Battalion:

I would like to comment on a letter which appeared in the November 13 Battalion by Mr. Marvin Oehl.

I have visited the A&M campus often and have heard the use of foreign languages by the students. I see nothing wrong with this.

I have heard groups of Aggies speaking English and just because it's English doesn't make what some of them say pleasant. You don't have to speak a foreign language to sound like a scatterbrain. I think the A&M campus is a wonderful, friendly place to visit and most of the young men are very polite, but if a person is lucky enough to know another language he should be allowed to speak it when and where he wishes.

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The Vatican Ecumenical Council was urged Tuesday to act against the legacy of Nazi anti-Semitism and proclaim the universal right to religious liberty.

Both issues have created controversy at the gathering of 2,300 church fathers. But the appeals for council declarations on anti-Semitism and man's right to worship as he wishes filled St. Peter's with prolonged applause.

The plea for better Catholic-Jewish relations came from Augustin Cardinal Bea, German-born president of the Vatican's Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity.

A day after three Middle East prelates assailed the document as dangerous for Christians in Arab nations, the 82-year-old Jesuit stressed anew that the statement had no political significance.

Cardinal Bea said the declaration was needed now to remove from Christian minds any false ideas fostered by Nazi propaganda linking anti-Semitism to Church teachings.

Bishop Emile Josef Marie de Smedt of Belgium said a declaration on religious liberty would promote the cause of Christian unity, provide a defense against communism and encourage peace among all men.

The Belgian prelate also said a proclamation on religious freedom would help Christian unity — "in view of the fact that many non-Catholics hold the Church in aversion and suspect her of Machiavellianism for allegedly demanding religious freedom where she is in a minority and ignoring it when she gets control."

He cautioned, however, that religious freedom does not mean man is free to solve his religious problems by "personal whim and caprice and with no moral obligations to God."

He urged approval of the declaration before the Dec. 4 recess as a sign of council progress.
