Let's Get Those Borderline Cases

With the closing of the Fall semester and the one-week lapse before the beginning of the Spring semester, A&M students once again will have the opportunity to talk with graduating high school seniors about their need for a college education and the facilities A&M has to offer them.

Many high school graduates-to-be find themselves in a predicament about this time of the year, as they cope with the problem of deciding at which college or university they will spend four of the most decisive years of their lives.

Some are dedicated to one school or another, but many are still searching. These students are apt to take what sounds like the best offer to them. To this group Aggies should make their appeal.

One of the best methods of reaching this group is by speaking to them as a group. Some Aggies, especially those from the smaller high schools, might persuade their high school principals to allow them to speak to the male May graduates.

However, it must be remembered that a student can do more harm than good for his school if he makes a bad presentation.

He should have some concrete facts about A&M: degree opportunities, costs, Corps life, tradition and possibilities after graduation, to mention a few.

To close his informal talk, the student should invite anyone who might desire further material to see him individually. Above all, he should invite the students to feel free to visit his school at any time. He might stress the A&M High School Career Day program scheduled for March 14.

Aggies may secure information which they might find helpful from the Office of the Registrar in the Richard Coke Building.

Reynolds' Rap

by Mike Reynolds

A man of many faces, or at least many policies, is what President Lyndon B. Johnson did his best to appear as in his State of the Union message last week.

He was definitely looking ahead to the election in November, and at the same time, he was most assuredly casting his eye over his shoulder at the shadow of his most likely opponent, Barry Goldwater, who is still hot on the tail of the present Democratic administration—be it Kennedy or Johnson—despite all of the liberals' wishing that he would disappear.

President Johnson declared that this will be a year of frugality, tax cuts and balanced, as well as reduced, budgets, trying hard to appeal to the moderate conservative that is fast shaping up as the vote to get in 1964.

Yet at the same time he declared a "War on Poverty," as he calls it, and inside sources at the White House have been reported as saying he has allocated roughly $1 billion to the program. He has also given a hardy "me too" to almost every one of John F. Kennedy's programs.

One can't help but wonder, "Where is it all going to come from." A person is placed in the same situation as that of a shopper in a bargain basement. When he begins to look at the wide selection of goods at a bargain price, he naturally begins to wonder at the quality of the merchandise and if he should bother with it at all.

Congress should also wonder!

How are they to review and pass a program of welfare, relief and social legislation when they are also faced with the Civil Rights Bill and its controversial public accommodations clause, a tax bill that is definitely needed if the nation is to keep away from deficit spending and other programs that have been around much longer and are probably more important anyway.

All of these measures could not possibly be considered in the time available, and if it is, how is Johnson going to keep the budget below $100 billion at a time when the population is increasing at a rate of several million a year.

Yes, Johnson would do well to glance over his shoulder at Goldwater, for this man is not going to let him forget this business. These are the things the campaign will be made of.

Editor,

The Battalion:

Surely Mr. Wright could not have written the article appearing in the January 9 issue of The Battalion. Amid the growing conservative minded students in colleges and universities across the United States and especially at Texas A&M, I am amazed that we apparently have

Lindsey, Smith Get

New Bank Position

Bryan's First Bank and Trust Co. has announced the addition of two A&M University officials, Jim Lindsey, Director of the Department of University Information and Publications and Robert L. Smith Jr., head of the Data Processing Center, to its board of directors.

At a meeting Tuesday, the board appointed Lindsey and Smith, previously advisors to the group, as full directors.

— Sound Off — no conservative representation in our school paper.

How can any logically minded person review Lyndon B. Johnson's "State of the Union Message" and not be intellectually offended?

1. Do you believe it is possible to have a world without hate ... to have abundance for all and want for none forever more?

2. Do you believe it a sound economic principle to cut federal revenue and not cut federal spending proportionately?

3. Do you believe a man owning a public enterprise should be compelled to serve people against his will?

4. Lastly, and most important, do you believe that it is the responsibility of the rich to support the poor?

If you are so shallow minded as to support these policies set forth by L.B.J. and to think that Senator Barry Goldwater will take issue with them, I feel sorry for you.

COUNT ON CHEVROLET TO BUILD THE ONE YOU WANT

ONE-STOP CHEVROLET SHOPPING never meant more than it does today. Five lines to choose from—starting with the Jet-smooth luxury Chevrolet, then the totally new Chevelle, the better-than-ever Chevy II, sporty Corvair, and the exciting Corvette Sting Ray. And you've got 45 models and 22 engines to choose from.

Chevrolet's Impala Super Sport series tops the lineup with luxury you'll love to get used to.

Chevelle has the room you want in a size you can handle. Chevy II's handsome in sparkling new trim. Corvairs for '64 enjoy crisp styling accents and more power—nearly 19% more horsepower in the standard engine. The famous Corvette Sting Rays have a smoother ride and smarter interiors.

Put all this choice together and you see why you can count on Chevrolet to build the one you want in '64! And it's at your Chevrolet dealer's!
