

Retired Foreman Recalls Changes

By MICHAEL REYNOLDS
Battalion Staff Writer

"Yes, sir, there have been quite a few changes around A&M since I got here," said George L. Outlaw discussing his 37 years of employment with the college as maintenance foreman for Duncan and Sbisla Dining Halls.

Outlaw retired on Feb. 1. The physical plant, students conduct and types of students were the three areas in which Outlaw noted changes on the A&M campus.

"I can still remember the acre or so of shacks that used to stand where Law and Puryear Halls are now. In the late 20's we used to call that area Hollywood. Down on the other end of the campus, I can remember how the Agriculture Building just sat out there in the middle of a prairie," said Outlaw.

The retired foreman continued about the poor condition of streets around the campus and the transportation available to students.

"Students were not allowed to have cars on the campus then. They could own them but they had to make arrangements to keep them in town," stated Outlaw.

The biggest change that Outlaw noted was in the conduct of freshmen on the campus.

"Of course there is not the type of hazing at A&M as there used to be but the fish just don't speak any more like they used to.

"Why, there wasn't a person on the campus that the freshmen didn't know; and they spoke to everyone that they passed and called them by name, even the profs and office workers," continued Outlaw.

There were only 2,400 students on the campus at that time, added Outlaw.

"The boys as a whole haven't changed too much, although we are getting a lot younger group of boys now and they are mostly from cities. We used to be almost one half agriculture majors and the rest were farmers sons too.

"They used to do some pretty crazy things around here," Outlaw said. "I guess they will continue to do crazy things as long as there is an A&M and a Corps of Cadets," said Outlaw.

AMONG THE PROFS

Bolivian Advisor Revisits Campus

Sanford W. White, agricultural advisor to the Bolivian Extension Service at Santa Cruz, is spending two weeks conferring with Extension personnel and other officials at A&M University.

The agriculturist has been employed with the U. S. Agency for International Development for the past seven years and has been stationed in Bolivia for more than two years.

White holds BS and MS degrees in agricultural education from A&M.

Dr. Mark L. Fowler, A&M University agricultural economist, will participate in a technical meeting of the North Central Marketing Committee Feb. 20-21 at Kansas City, Mo.

Fowler is an associate professor in the Department of Agricultural Economics and Sociology.

The marketing committee is developing a program of research into possible effects of European Economic Community Policy on the Export of Agricultural products from the United States.

Dr. Lee J. Ashworth, Jr., assistant professor in the A&M Department of Plant Sciences, has been named secretary-treasurer of the American Phytopathology Society's Southern Section.

The scientist was elected to the post during the recent Southern Agricultural Workers conference at Atlanta, Ga.

Science Academy Prexy Is Speaker For State Meeting

Texas Academy of Science President Lawrence Curtis of Fort Worth and other newly elected officers will make their first joint appearance Thursday, when they are honored with an informal coffee on campus.

The coffee is scheduled at 3 p.m. in Physics Building 146, Dean Frank Hubert of the College of Arts and Sciences announced.

The officers are president Curtis, director of the Fort Worth Zoological Park; president-elect Richard Eads, an A&M faculty member for many years and now a consulting chemist; secretary-treasurer Charles LaMotte, A&M biology professor; and "Journal of Science" editor Robert E. Boyer, University of Texas geology professor.

"All who are interested in science, including the social sciences are invited," Dean Hubert said. This includes public school teachers, as well as faculty members of A&M and area colleges and universities.

Oral Polio Vaccine Offered Students

Dr. Charles R. Lyons, director of the University Hospital, said Wednesday that students desiring the Type I Oral Polio Vaccine should contact the hospital this week.

About 100 of the sugar tablets are on hand and will be offered to students and dependents on a first come, first served basis, Dr. Lyons said.

WHERE THERE'S SPRAY
BIG PINE KEY, Fla. (AP) — Fire fighters here are asking residents to take a second look before reporting a blaze.

The engines have been called out twice recently by citizens who saw what they thought was smoke. It turned out to be billows of insecticide from a truck spraying for mosquitoes.
