Duty, Honor, Country

A piece of Honor will be placed in a grave in Norfolk, Va., this Saturday when Gen. Douglas MacArthur is buried. MacArthur will probably be remembered as one of the greatest Americans to ever live. A born leader who had faced the horrors of death from early years in his life, MacArthur had the respect for the ideals he had defended in three major wars embedded so deeply that when President Harry S. Truman removed Mac from his command post in Korea, the General accepted the decision with hardly more than a comment.

A military leader of unquestionable ability, MacArthur had no desire to become engaged in a political storm over his dismissal. He simply accepted the Constitutionally delegated authority, probably with some personal pain, but in the same manner he had defended that same authority so often—with Honor.

A few years ago the General told a graduating class of cadets at the U. S. Military Academy that their respect to duty, honor, country would dictate "What you ought to be. What you can be. What you will be." It was probably the Honor of the General that led him to show the respect for duty and country that he did throughout his life.

Our nation is rapidly losing its MacArthurs. The question that could become frightening if given much attention—Who is going to take up the Codes of Honor established by MacArthur and others like him after they are all gone? Is our generation up to the task, or will Honor truly be buried with MacArthur?

We pray to God for the hope of our country—Honor. It takes a strong man to live with Honor for duty, country and God. Can our generation place duty, honor and country before personal pride? Will our generation—and necessarily our nation—continue to enjoy the MacArthur-type Honor? It's our privilege just for the taking.

*Aggie Would-Be Travelers
May Make Contacts Here*

Editor's Note: This is the second of a series of three articles by J. Donald Deliz, Department of Modern Language, discussing travel and features of travel which Aggies might enjoy for a summer vacation. Deliz was asked to write the series, because he has traveled in much the same manner a student would enjoy traveling.

By J. DONALD DELIZ
Students afflicted with traveling pangs can find relief by considering the old adage that "conversation teaches more than meditation." This capsule of wisdom can prove to be a soothing anodyne when interpreted relative to travel. A little bit of talk with those who have been abroad and those facing the happy prospect has revealed to me that there are many ways, here on campus, for "live-wires" to make a contact.

There are some scientific departments on campus which have researchers going to Latin American countries seeking specimens. If you ask around, you might get a job as a helper. According to some Aggies who have gone on these junkets, there wasn't much money in it. However, the experience included a lot of free time to take-off on your own and really get acquainted with the country and especially the people. This combined with the realization of your desire to travel will make up for the lack in pay.

Another way to get a crack at travel is to combine it with your summer job. If you have been working for a certain company which has foreign branches, ask if you can work for them in one of their foreign locations this year. In several cases this has been the "Open Sesame!" to realize a much wanted goal. These are just a couple of ideas gathered from conversation which Emerson calls "the best of life," and we call "bull sessions."

There are those who no matter how they try will not be able to make the trip in their mind's eye this year, but that doesn't mean it is The-Endsville. You might even feel lucky because you'll have time to prepare. The Department of Health Education and Welfare in Washington D. C. gives several fellowships in each school for undergraduate students to go abroad for summer study. The catch is that you must make your application almost one school year in advance. Specific information about this plan can be obtained from Dr. Thomas Comfort in the Department of Modern Languages here on campus.

This requisite of almost a year of waiting is very wise on the part of this government agency because it underlines the two passwords for satisfactory traveling — Anticipation and preparation. Your trip means so much more to you if you follow the advice of the renowned epigrammatist Dr. Johnson, "A man must carry knowledge with him if he would bring home knowledge."

It also gives you an opportunity to consider that one of the most beautiful parts of travel is coming back home. It sounds strange, but as some anonymous wag once said, truth is stranger than fiction. The truth is that travel makes us become more appreciative of home. It takes the veil of familiarity off of everything. Poets have celebrated this fact in many works. Henry David Thoreau puts it, "the best travel reveals the value of home and enables one to enjoy home better." How true it is!

In both Britain and Sweden it is a miracle if one survives just crossing the street. Which ever way you look when you're fixing to cross, you can rest assured that the cars are coming from the other direction. In Stockholm the traffic seems so reckless that the pedestrians gather at corners in Viking-like bands of at least ten and then brave the traffic together. The drivers have to either stop or hit ten people at once — a perfect strike for drivers who are bowlers.

Minister Killed

During Setdown

CLEVELAND (AP) — An earth-moving tractor ran over and killed a young Presbyterian minister during a civil rights demonstration at a school site Tuesday.

His death touched off rock-throwing, car-smashing disorders by a crowd which at night-fall numbered about 3,500, mostly Negroes.

Police used tear gas to disperse the crowd.

The Rev. Bruce W. Klunder, 27, a white Presbyterian minister who had participated in a number of demonstrations for civil rights, was dead when he was lifted from the dirt on which he had thrown himself, face down, to block the tractor.

"I backed up and didn't know that man was back of me," said John White, 33, Mentor, Ohio, the driver.
