

Goldwater, Rocky View Primaries

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Barry Goldwater and Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller seek votes Tuesday in two primary elections, but their eyes are on the test coming up Friday in Oregon.

Rockefeller, governor of New York, is the only entry in West Virginia's Republican presidential primary Tuesday.

And Goldwater, senator from Arizona, is the only presidential contender on the ballot in Nebraska's GOP primary. Write-in vote campaigns have been waged for Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge and, belatedly, for Rockefeller and former Vice President Richard M. Nixon.

Write-in votes are not counted in West Virginia. With no opposition there, Rockefeller was busy campaigning in Oregon.

Goldwater, who cut down his Oregon campaigning last month, scheduled a one-day campaign swing in Nebraska.

With no major contests between presidential hopefuls or candidates for other offices, Republican voter turnouts in both states are expected to be fairly light.

The 14 Republican convention delegates to be chosen in West

Virginia's primary are not bound by the outcome of the preference vote, and they are not slated or pledged to any candidate.

Six district delegates will be chosen in Nebraska, and they likewise are not bound to the primary winner, although most of the delegate-candidates have said they favor Goldwater. Ten at-large delegates will be chosen at a state convention June 1.

Voters in both states also will choose delegates to the Democratic convention. They are expected to vote for President Johnson, although his name is not on the ballot in either state.

Also at stake Tuesday are nominations for senator and governor in both states.

Hottest race appears to be a four-way fight for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in West Virginia. Former State Commerce Commissioner Hulett C. Smith is the pre-election favorite. Gov. William W. Barron cannot succeed himself.

Favored to win the GOP nomination in a political comeback is Cecil H. Underwood, who eight years ago was elected governor at the age of 33. Four years ago he lost a bid for a Senate seat.

WRIGHT or WRONG

by John Wright

It is a proud moment when the latest achievement of the U. S. aircraft industry is rolled into the sunlight out of the depths of the assembly hanger. Unfortunately, the efforts of many short-sighted people have succeeded in delaying the completion of the first XB-70 by almost two years.

The XB-70 is a revolutionary aircraft designed for speeds up to 2000 miles an hour. It is a huge aircraft, weighing 250 tons, built of titanium and steel, and has cost $1.3 billion for its development.

Conceived a number of years ago as a backup for the intercontinental missiles, the luckless aircraft became the center of a controversy that resulted in a drastic slowdown of its development—a slowdown that threatens to cost the U. S. its leadership in the world aircraft industry.

Many people, including members of Congress, were against the high expenditure for the XB-70's development because they felt that the project would be a needless duplication of the nation's ICBM system. They seemed not to appreciate the fact that the development of the XB-70 would furnish valuable experience and data for future civil aircraft.

There is now a better than even chance that either the English and French or the Russians will be operating supersonic airliners long before the United States has completed its first prototype.

How has this situation come about? It came about mainly because of the high development cost involved in building a supersonic airliner, and because of the highly competitive nature of the airline industry today.

For the first time in history a civil airliner is to be built that will exceed the performance of any present conventional military aircraft, excepting perhaps the A-11. It has been almost traditional that the construction and operation of civil aircraft benefited from experience of already developed military types.

Unfortunately the logical military aircraft that would have provided the needed experience for development of the American SST is the belated B-70. Had the B-70 program gone ahead full pace the United States would not be faced with the dilemma it has today.

The dilemma is this: The Anglo-French Concorde project is well on its way, with deliveries slated to begin in the very early seventies. The Concorde will be a Mach 2 aircraft, which means that conventional materials can be used for its construction. It is logical to assume that they could beat the United States in introducing this transport on the highly competitive transatlantic route.

The one possible way to get our coals out of the fire can be too leapfrog development of the Mach 2 transport and develop a Mach 3 version that will put the European Concorde into obsolescence before it has much of a chance to gain inroads in the transatlantic market. Competitive world airlines, knowing that a successful American Mach 3 transport is around the corner, might be reluctant to invest in a Mach 2 aircraft.

This will require an immense effort on the part of the American aircraft industry, but if the B-70 program is stepped up, and experience from the A-11 is utilized we might just rescue ourselves from an embarrassing position.

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United States was reported Monday to have reached the conclusion that there will be no significant shift in favor of seating Red China at the next session of the U. N. General Assembly.

Authoritative sources said U.S. officials now feel that France's recognition of the Peking regime in January this year will have little effect on the assembly vote when the question of China representation comes up in the fall.

U. S. sources indicated that France has made no effort to influence the countries friendly to it.

Last fall 41 nations voted in favor of seating Peking, 57 against and 12 abstained. India and the Soviet Union were among the original boosters of Red China but exerted themselves very little last year.

There is concern, the sources said, over what they view as the aggressive attitude of the Peking regime in its ideological split with the Soviet Union.

Western officials are pointing out the danger of a complete paralysis of the Security Council by vetoes if Red China is seated. Informed quarters said the United States still stands by its position that, if the Soviet bloc fails to pay its overdue assessments for the middle East and Congo operations, a U. N. charter provision should be invoked suspending their voting privileges.

Exec Committees To Count Votes

AUSTIN (AP) — Executive committees of the state democratic and republican parties meet here Tuesday to count the May 2 primary votes and officially declare the winners or runoff candidates for state and district offices.

The State Democratic Committee meets at 11 a.m. and the State Republican Committee at 2 p.m. The votes were canvassed by county committees last week and the state canvass is generally a tabulation of the county totals.

The unofficial totals, as collected by the Texas Election Bureau, were announced Sunday. The election bureau totals showed a record 1,681,535 votes in the Democratic primary, slightly more than half the estimated qualified voters. The election bureau showed about 141,500 voters in the Republican primary, a record vote for that party in any first primary.

Rusk Seeks NATO Help Against Reds

THE HAGUE (AP) — Secretary of State Dean Rusk sought Monday night to mobilize members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization behind U.S. efforts to choke Cuba's economic life and help Communist-menaced South Viet Nam.

With quiet diplomacy on the eve of the NATO ministerial meeting, Rusk also moved to forestall a rupture of the North Atlantic alliance's southeastern flank, urging Greece and Turkey to come to terms quickly over Cyprus.

During a day of intense diplomatic activity, Rusk met with British Foreign Secretary Richard A. Butler and foreign ministers Gerhard Schroeder of West Germany, Ferdiun Cemal Erkin of Turkey, Stavros Kostopoulos of Greece and A. Franco Nogueira of Portugal.

Informed sources said Rusk sought to learn from Nogueira Portugal's intentions about the future of Angola, Mozambique and Portuguese Guinea. Rusk was reported to have told him Portugal should at some point be willing to grant self-determination to the African colonies.

The United States wants its allies to join in a virtual trade embargo of the Castro regime. It particularly opposes the recent sales of British buses and French locomotives to Cuba on state-guaranteed credit.

There were some signs Rusk may be on the verge of persuading the British to check their trade with Cuba, but sources said there had been no concrete development along this line.

On South Viet Nam, the United States wants its allies to provide some help to bolster the moral of the people, such as sending nurses or technicians. This would make the Vietnamese feel less isolated, it was felt.
