Schoolboy Baseball Teams Ready For Austin Tourney

BY HAROLD V. RATLIFF
Eight teams will go to Austin next week for the state schoolboy baseball tournament. Interest will be at a minimum compared to the other sports but it shouldn't be like that. True, baseball was the last of the major sports to come under the aegis of the Texas Interscholastic League and it takes time to build. But baseball seems to be going much slower than the other sports did. Fewer schools play it than any other sport in the league program. Yet it is one of the most important and gives less trouble than any of them. There have been few ineligibility squabbles. Baseball was the last sport to be taken into the program. For years the schools held out on grounds that there was more chance of a boy running into professionalism. No other sport had the temptations of baseball, they said. Too many towns would get a ball club together and pay the boys to play. But at Dallas a man named P. C. Cobb was making baseball an important part of the sports program. He showed what could be done. The League instituted baseball as one of its official sports in 1948. And for 16 years it has been conducted without the hint of even a minor scandal. American Legion, Little League and other leagues for the youngsters was the reason. The boys played in these leagues and passed up the summer semi-pro clubs. Baseball has a struggle to get its just dues because the football coaches generally don't want it because it might interfere with their spring training (for the big schools) and the track coaches don't want it because it interferes with their activities. There has been a proposal to play baseball in the summer when school is out and this would probably be just the boost the game needed. Then it would not interfere with other sports and chances of drawing a crowd would be better. But too many schools oppose this because it would mean added expense—coaches during the summer months would have to be paid extra. However, this year the state tournament is being held two weeks later than usual and will be going on when school is out. It's a sort of experiment to see if baseball would do better if it had a better season.

Pre-Registration To Start Monday

The first of 14 pre-registration sessions for Texas A&M University freshmen begins Monday. The two-day conferences are expected to attract 1500 new students. "This program helps new students prepare for a successful university career," S. A. Kerley of the Counseling and Testing Center said.

The conference program includes a battery of placement tests, Reserve Officer Training Corps orientation, unit and dormitory assignment and a meeting with the students' academic dean for registration. "Students also become acquainted with the campus and have an opportunity to meet key people," Kerley said.
