

'Bloomer Girl' Cast Nabs Local Talent

Where do play directors find actors and actresses?

Here's the lineup for "Bloomer Girl," a musical comedy which will be presented at A&M University next Thursday through Saturday at 8 p.m.

Mary Lou Stanford, a blonde Baylor University coed home for a relaxing summer, was recruited to serve as "Evalina," the female lead.

Dr. William H. Andrew, Jr., local physician, will play the role of a successful Yankee hoopskirt manufacturer named "Horatio."

The sheriff will be Harry Gooding, A&M System architect who also is responsible for set designs.

One of the deputies is an A&M student from Israel, Jon Sharon, and another is Gordon Hill, a Stephen F. Austin High School student.

Mayor Roland Dansby's two sons were recruited. Bill has the male lead, and Bob will be a big-time buyer.

Two Brazosport school teachers, Kathy Gould and Mary Varvel, received the nod to be prompter and prop lady, respectively.

Another coed home on summer vacation, Jeanne Smith of Southern Methodist, is learning lines to play "Phoebe." Miss Smith is a soloist in SMU's choir.

Directors Bob Boone and Mrs. Billie Jean Barron found a drummer in Caldwell, some other music majors in Bryan-College Station, a dozen Aggie student wives, local high school students and A&M faculty wives.

Charlene Ragsdale and Eveline Gilmore have designed and made all women's costumes for the 19th Century play.

Mrs. Betty Sholly of Bryan's Betty Moore dance studios volunteered to do the choreography, and Wallace Johnston of the Memorial Student Center staff agreed to construct sets.

"Bloomer Girl," a musical comedy with old-fashioned charm, portrays a hoopskirt manufacturer whose business is being threatened with the advent of bloomers.

He carefully marries five of his six daughters to successful hoopskirt salesmen, and the sixth, Evalina, is defiant. She is passionately attracted to her Aunt Dolly Bloomer, (Mrs. Lee Hance) an ardent suffragette, originator of the bloomer and believer in the emancipation of slaves.

The six daughters, in addition to Miss Stanford, include Nancy Muehlstein, Carla Vaughn, Suzanne Medlen, Fannelle Edwin and Jeanne Smith.

Five sons-in-law are Andy Olivares, Henry Vander Cruyssen, Skip Wallace, Bob Medlen and Don Reiser. Jeff, a bachelor who courts Evalina, is portrayed by Bill Dansby.

Other actors and actresses include Ruth Samson, Bernest Evans, Diana Wierus, Joe Powell, Glen Collier, Jack Cline, James Burns, Alex Quisenberry and John Walcutt.

The bloomer girls include Aggie wives, college coeds, coeds-to-be, and other local residents.

You can barely top the combination Sheila and Sharon Heavey use to keep themselves comfortable in the current heat wave. Sheila goes topless with Sharon getting the topping outside their home in Oakland, N. J., a suburb of New York City. They're the 23-month-old twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. John Heavey. ## A&M Officials To Ft. Sill

Three A&M University officials will be at Ft. Sill, Okla., late this week to visit 200 Aggies attending the six-week summer camp for advanced cadets of the Army Reserve Officer Training Corps.

Participating in the visitation program are Dean of Students James P. Hannigan, Dean of Instruction W. J. Graff and Col. D. L. Baker, professor of military science.

The 200 Aggies and 1,800 other advanced cadets in Army ROTC programs at universities of this region complete summer training July 31.

The A&M representatives will have an opportunity to eat with the cadets, see activities on rifle ranges and in the field, and to meet with the summer camp and Fort Sill staffs.

Water, Water Everywhere Must Be Properly Treated

The confidence with which man drinks his water is quite a testimonial to those responsible for keeping it safe.

But keeping water safe is becoming a more perplexing problem, with tons of new waste being drained into rivers and streams, points out Leon R. Holbert of A&M University's Engineering Extension Service.

Holbert heads a four-man team that conducts classes in small and large Texas towns, from Maud, Hico and Teague to Dallas, Houston and San Antonio.

He and the other roving instructors—J. R. Bryan, James A. Wilson and W. A. Mixon—are familiar faces to many municipal and industrial water superintendents, sewage operators and others responsible for keeping the water supply safe.

Last year, 2,009 men attended

58 area schools. The figure is 500 greater than 1962-63 and almost 1,000 higher than 1959-60. The classes ranged from 8 to 63 in enrollment.

"Water is our basic necessity of life," Holbert warned, "but if it is improperly treated, it becomes a vicious enemy. The health of Texans is dependent upon a safe water supply."

He mentioned such diseases as typhoid fever, dysentery, cholera, hepatitis and perhaps polio can be caused by water-borne bacteria and viruses.

Holbert and his staff face a teaching schedule that is filled through the 1964-65 year.

He credits stiffer legislation regarding pollution as the greatest demand for training.

"The 57th Texas Legislature provided for a water pollution control board to see that municipal, industrial and other groups control pollution from their respective plants," Holbert explained.

Failure to comply with the new law can result in fines of $100 to $1,000 per day until the violation is corrected. Each violation is a separate offense.

So the Engineering Extension Service receives the calls for instruction.

Better trained personnel is only part of the problem to keep clear, clean water, Holbert said.

"Many cities are far behind in providing adequate facilities to bear today's abundance of waste," the Midwestern University graduate reported.

Problems of delivering safe water to millions of home owners 24 hours a day, whether it comes from wells or lakes, are staggering, Holbert continued.
