

Through The Workshoppers' Lenses

SO THIS IS AGGIELAND
... no hot air here.

NOW HEAR THIS
... curfew will be enforced!

WHO, WHAT, WHEN, WHERE, WHY
... it is too cool here to get out and get any kind of story.

AND BEAUTIES TOO
... Gayle Gravley is crowned Miss Workshop, 1964.

High School Journalist

By LARRY HOLLIS
"Hold it, will you? Now, if you would pose over here..."
"What is your name again? Uh, could you spell it? Now, could you tell me..."
"How can I dummy this page? The pictures haven't even been taken!"

These quotations, not to mention certain others, have been heard all week long by high school students attending journalism workshop sessions on campus, with headquarters at the Memorial Student Center.

The workshop has been sponsored by A&M for the last six years to aid students in developing better newspaper and yearbooks on the high school level.

Activities began Sunday, when most of the delegation arrived for registration to discover that a summer thunderstorm had brought a moment of relief from the hot weather. However, they discovered that relief is often temporary as they traipsed about the campus the rest of the week.

Over 300 students and sponsors have convened, most from Texas. One delegation though, hails from Cameron, La., and one sponsor, Miss Janet Douglas, arrived from Hamilton, Ohio.

Yearbook workers number largest with 165 students, while newspaper ranks next with 120. Photographers and sponsors number 30 each.

The day begins early for most delegates as they walk to Sbis Hall in the morning mist to eat breakfast. With this exercise and nourishment, some manage to wake up in time to catch part of the morning sessions.

Much of the afternoon is spent in working on various assignments given to students by their directors, who are eager to help them develop their talents-or lack of them!

Comes supper and the delegation crawls over to the cafeteria to replenish themselves. The meals may be long, and the food may be tempting, but fortunately no serious riots have occurred.

Nights have been arranged to provide fun and entertainment. For example, several delegations presented various acts in a talent show Monday night. Aggies had a chance to show their talent Wednesday night when they were invited to the workshop dance. It appeared that the girls had the most fun.

Activities also include attendance at the A&M summer musical, "Bloomer Girl," Thursday night.

A barbecue was held Tuesday afternoon and a buffet supper will be held Thursday night.

Awards will be presented Friday morning to recognize the endeavors of many of the students.

Afterwards, the delegations will prepare to leave the A&M campus. They will take with them memories of tired feet, long cafeteria lines, humidity, fun and most of all, work. The results of this work will show in the newspapers, yearbooks and photographs of the coming year.

Or, anyway, it is supposed to.

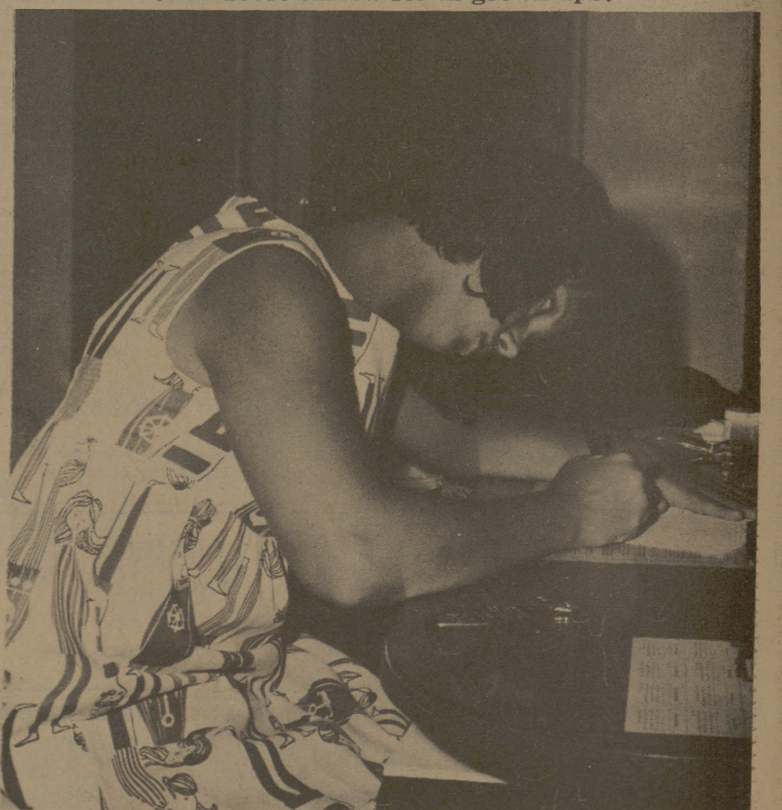

HERE, NO HERE, NO—
... just were on the campus are we?

YOU MUST BE JOKING
... a 10:30 curfew for us grown-ups?

PLENTY OF HOMEWORK TO BE DONE
... after curfew, dances, parties swimming, singing and other small details.

DEAR MOMMY AND DADDY
... sure glad you aren't here, we work all day and night.

Delegates Veto Topless

For what it's worth, 68 per cent of the High School Journalism Workshop delegates thumbed down the new topless bathing suit trend.

That's the result of a poll taken by the "Sweatshopper," one of the workshop's publications edited by Susie Aycock of Nederland High School.

Editor Aycock penned that 51 per cent of the male delegates voiced no objection to the new style, although 75 per cent opposed their favorite girl wearing the garment.

Only 13 per cent of the girls agree with the new vogue, and only 7 of 100 said they would wear it, the article noted.
