28 Accepted In Pre-Med, Pre-Dent

The Premedical Pre dental Committee at A&M University has announced the acceptance of 28 students in medical and dental colleges this fall and winter.

This makes a total of 250 A&M premedical pre dental students accepted by professional schools since 1955, Professor Howard L. Gravett said. He is chairman of the seven-member, interdepartmental committee.

Eleven of the Aggies have been accepted as students at the University of Texas Medical Branch in Galveston, six at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical School, Dallas, four at the University of Texas Dental Branch, Houston, and two at Baylor University College of Dentistry, Dallas. Five other professional schools each have accepted one A&M student.

Oyster Killing Parasite Studied

A three-year study of a parasite which causes heavy losses of oysters from the Mexican coast to the Delaware area has been started by Dr. John G. Mackin, head of the A&M University biology department. The study is sponsored by a new $42,000 grant from the U. S. Public Health Service.

Mackin is widely known for his studies of oysters and their diseases and holds other research grants.

The new grant is for "Studies in the Development of Dermocystidium marinum," a parasite first described by Mackin in 1950. The parasite has since been the subject of studies by others.

Dr. A. H. Thompson of the A&M University meteorology faculty has been invited to Washington next week for conferences on the newly-launched Nimbus-A weather satellite and his studies based upon photographs from the earlier Tiros system.

Thompson has presented various papers and lectures based on his studies of satellite weather observations.

He awaited Monday his first copies of photos sent by the Nimbus-A satellite whose features include a television system expected to cover the entire earth, a first for a weather satellite.

The Nimbus-A was placed last week into a pole-to-pole orbit. Thompson expects to leave Monday or Tuesday (Sept. 7 or 8) and will be at the U.S. Weather Bureau satellite office most of the week.

Dr. Kurt Irgolic and Prof. Ralph A. Zingaro of A&M University's Department of Chemistry will speak to the Selenium-Tellurium symposium scheduled in Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 24 and 25.

Irgolic, a post-doctorate research associate from Austria, is engaged in research in this area.

Zingaro is at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory on leave of absence from A&M. Selection of agencies to participate in specialized projects of the National Cooperative Highway Research Program is the item of business of committee meetings which Dr. R. N. Traxler of A&M University's Texas Transportation Institute is attending in Washington, D. C.

The committees with which he is meeting are those of the Highway Research Board involving materials and construction in the fields of general and bituminous materials.

Dr. R. N. Traxler who heads the department of asphalt technology in the Texas Transportation Institute at A&M University is author of a chapter in a comprehensive technical handbook entitled, "Bituminous Materials" which is now off the presses of Interscience Publishers.

Traxler's 68 page chapter is entitled "Rheology and Rheological Modifiers Other than Elastomers—Structure and Time." The same book also contains a chapter by his son, Richard W. Traxler, entitled "Microbial Action on Bituminous Materials." The book contains nine other chapters by nationally known asphalt authorities.

The A&M Research Foundation has been notified by the National Science Foundation of a renewal of its support for an oceanographic study of biological productivity in Antarctica waters. Dr. S. Z. Sayed of the A&M University Department of Oceanography and Meteorology is the principal investigator for the study which this fall goes into the fourth year. The new grant is for $29,200.
