

Reynolds' Rap

by Mike Reynolds

"The old order changeth; making way for the new, Lest the world be ruined by one great tradition . . ."

Maggies have come of age. Many students, in and out of the Corps of Cadets will argue that Maggies are not truly part of A&M; that they are just girls getting an education here because they find it convenient.

Not so! The number of coeds are increasing every semester and are here to stay. They deserve a larger part in the activities of the school.

Many young ladies have proved over the long girl-less years of A&M that they can catch the undefinable something known as the Spirit of Aggieland just on a weekend date. Now when the men are down and the Aggie Band plays the War Hymn and a lump forms in everyone's throat, it is said that they have spirit.

But when a girl gets carried away and can't help yelling "Gig 'em Aggies," the men just laugh, or, in other cases, curse them openly and add their resentments against the coed to those they already harbor against the civilians, the corps, the deans, the Board of Directors, Teasips and the twentieth century in general.

The Maggies are said to want to support their football team with signs, and rumors are stirring about a coed spirit organization. University Regulations provided for the formation of student organizations for . . . "social purposes with the approval of the Dean of Students . . ." Action on these lines is therefore up to the girls.

However, their participation in governmental affairs on the campus is left to those already in power.

The Constitution of the Student Senate is presently being rewritten. No reason can be seen why the ladies should not have a constituted representative in this body. The senate has been making rulings pertaining to the welfare of coeds on campus, and yet there is no one on the Senate that directly represents the girls' opinions.

It may be argued that the girls should come under the power of the Civilian Student Council and that their case should be pleaded by the CSC representative. No one could agree more on the first part. The girls are definitely entitled to a seat or seats on the CSC.

However, the coeds are such a unique group on this campus that a voice completely their own is to be highly desired on the Student Senate.

To paraphrase an old quotation . . . "Legislation against coeds without representation is tyranny."

Workers Oust Reporter From New Austin Building

AUSTIN (AP) — An Associated Press reporter was ordered Tuesday from Austin's new federal building after spending four minutes viewing work in rooms reportedly being outfitted for President Johnson.

The newsman, checking on Republican charges that Johnson's offices added $2.65 million to the building's cost, was asked to identify himself by a man who apparently was a construction supervisor.

After identifying himself, the newsman was escorted to an elevator and told: "Don't come back up here again without permission from the GSA (General Services Administration.)"

The ninth-floor suite became a campaign issue with a statement Tuesday from Clifton White, director of the Citizens for Goldwater-Miller, in Washington, that the presidential offices will not be equalled in splendor by anything built by the government.

White said the suite has teak wood panels and a fireplace large enough for 10-foot logs.

Viet Cong Switches Attack

From Military To Political

SAIGON, South Viet Nam (AP) — A U. S. military spokesman said Tuesday the Communist Viet Cong apparently has switched the emphasis of its campaign from military to political means, especially since the August riots in Saigon.

"Obviously, the military activities during September were not decisive one way or the other," he said. "Ever since the riots in Saigon one gets the impression that the V.C. (Viet Cong) have not staked their future on the military side. They probably are active in many other fields.
