BATTALION EDITORIALS

Batt Defends Against Attack

Rarely is it necessary for a student newspaper to openly defend itself and the honor of its editors against the unwarranted attacks of fellow students. But because those assailing these pages are denoted as campus leaders The Battalion takes exceptional distaste to their assertions.

Last night this publication was slandered at yell practice. If the aggressors had a legitimate problem or question about The Battalion's editorial policy its editors should have been the first to be informed-but not so. Instead the issue was aired at yell practice and the Corps of Cadets spontaneously tried and condemned all associated with this paper for "co-edism."

An explanation—a rebuttal—seems necessary to dispel the confusion and false accusations. Tuesday of this week a feature article on co-eds appeared in the pages of The Battalion. Written in cooperation with the Department of Journalism's feature writing class the story concerned a bonfire log secured by several A&M female students. Partly out of uniqueness, partly out of courtesy to the feature writing student the article was run.

To those who say this favors co-eds, we point out the editorial stands of The Battalion are determined by the editor and appear as editorials, not feature stories. Nor do the columns appearing in these pages necessarily represent the views of the entire staff. These comments are the personal observations of their authors.

The Battalion was also accused of not representing the views of the Corps. This is entirely correct. Nor do we necessarily represent the views of the civilian students, the foreign students, etc., etc., etc. For The Battalion represents Texas A&M University and not any specified faction within it. Only by treating each segment of the student body as equals—and this includes co-eds—can a fair and accurate newspaper be published.

Also discussed at the kangaroo court of yell practice was the composition of The Battalion staff. True, only one member of the Corps of Cadets is a member of our permanent staff. No qualified member of the A&M student body has ever been excluded from work on student publications regardless of race, color, creed or previous condition of servitude. But unfortunately, because of the time involved, the decision between a position on The Battalion and serving in the Corps must be made early in one's college career.

If this defense of our policy sounds as belligerent as the yell practice attacks, it is because we are more sensitive to the ramblings of the uninformed on our own campus. A distinction should be made by the Corps between Aggie Spirit and misguided emotions of persecution.

Editor. The Battalion:

Miss S. you appall me

Though personal it's not. "You're as Aggie as I am." My dear, that is rot! Awhile back I came here

And they gave me a name. My first name was fish, Can you say the same? I cut all my hair off

And proud I was, too. I was a Texas Aggie Fish — No one will say that of you. And I went to bonfire,

I chewed and I spat; My dear young Maggie You cannot say that.

You say you're an Aggie; I say that's not so. When Ag's believe that,

That's the day I will go. You say you love Aggies

That's not hard to see; But one last word Don't waste it on me! Joe Bush, '66

U. S. Tells Reds: 'Pay Up'

- The United States gave notice Thursday it will demand voting rights be taken away from the Soviet Union the day the U.N. General Assembly opens - Nov. 10 — unless the Russian pay up for peace keeping operations.

The step was taken amid hints from the Soviet Union that it will quit the United Nations if it is deprived of its assembly vote.
