Alcoholics Thought To Be Neurotics

People think of a person with recurrent attacks of malaria in almost the same way they think of a person who has cancer of the lungs or a brain tumor. And an alcoholic is thought of quite similarly to a neurotic person.
These are some of the concepts of disabilities found by A&M professor Donald G. Barker. He conducted a study of how "at least 50 judges carefully selected to be as representative as possible of the general public" rated 20 types of disabilities.
"The attitude the public, both employers and customers, has is an important factor in assessing disabilities," Barker said. "A person may be quite capable of doing the work, but due to the attitudes of the public he cannot be employed."
"A person may be cured of leprosy but unable to get work," Barker pointed out as an example.

Ag College To Create Recreation Curriculum

A&M University is busy setting up a new organization — a Department of Recreation and Parks — within its College of Agriculture.
The department is part of the college's also-new School of Natural Bio-Sciences recently approved by the Texas Commission on Higher Education. Operation will start this fall.
Other departments in the bio-sciences school are Range Science, formerly the Department of Range and Forestry, and Wildlife Science, formerly the Department of Wildlife Management.
Dr. R. E. Patterson, dean of the College of Agriculture, said time has produced a new philosophy known as multiple land use, meaning that utilization of land for food, fiber, timber and recreation is becoming a must.
"A study by the U. S. Department of Agriculture of outdoor recreation facilities on farms and ranches shows that the greatest potential for meeting future needs is on the nation's private rural land," Patterson said. "Nearly three-fourths of the U. S. mainland is in private ownership."
Another government survey, he said, has shown that many areas are fortunately more suitable for recreation than for agricultural production.
The dean added that the Department of Recreation and Parks will be aimed directly at the multiple land use philosophy.
Patterson emphasized that this study area is bulging with career opportunities for graduates. Many positions can be found in federal and state parks, municipal parks, private recreational areas, and as directors of recreational facilities for private industry.
Dr. R. C. Potts, assistant director of agricultural instruction, said the curriculum will concentrate on biological and physical resources important to outdoor recreation, and the socio-economic relationships which occur when people use wildland areas for recreation.
First and second-year students will study a broad range of science and humanity courses. From then on, study areas will cover conservation, wildlife, safety education, landscape horticulture, forestry, civil engineering, sociology, psychology, agronomy, wildland recreation, park administration, campsite design, recreation development, and landscape construction and maintenance.

Grad College To Host Rice For Lecture

Dr. Francis O. Rice will deliver the annual National Sigma XI and Graduate College lecture at 8 p.m. Thursday in Room 231 of the Chemistry Building.
"Production and Reactions of Free Radicals in Outer Space" will be the title of Rice's lecture.
Rice's experimental proof that organic compounds could be thermally and photochemically decomposed into free radicals, started the modern era of free radical science.
"Free radicals are continually produced in outer space," said Rice. "This can occur thermally when meteors collide with planets or in electrical discharges when thunderstorms occur in the atmospheres of planets; free radicals are also produced by light of short wave length emitted by heavenly bodies at high temperatures."
Presently, Rice is a visiting research professor of chemistry and principal research scientist in the Radiation Laboratory at the University of Notre Dame.
He was educated at the University of Liverpool, England, where he received the D. Sc. degree in 1916. From 1916 to the close of World War I, he held important positions in His Majesty's chemical plants.

Debate Club Getting Ready

Aggie Debate Club members with two recent meets completed are resting this week before competing Feb. 19 and 20 at Stephen F. Austin College in Nacodoghes.
The Aggie debaters also have their eyes set on the Southwestern Conference Tournament to be held at Texas Christian University March 19 and 20, Carl Kell said. He is debate coach and an instructor in English at A&M.
The Aggie Debate Club sent two two-man teams to the Baylor University Debate Tournament over the weekend. Sam Henry and Karl Rubenstein won two out of 10 debates, beating Air Force Academy and Ouachita University teams. David Gay and Jim Seabolt won over another Ouachita University team.

All Iowans applying for driver license for the first time now receive a one-year temporary permit, which is subject to immediate invalidation for conviction of a single moving violation.
