

Reynolds' Rap

by Mike Reynolds

The Space Fiesta '65 has crated up its exhibits, hauled off its 1/5 scale models and put the Memorial Student Center back the way it was before the people from NASA landed.

The program, sponsored by the Great Issues Committee of the MSC, inspired such learned comments as, "Eh, so what?" "Ah, I saw that last year," and "They must be trying to get this over to a bunch of kids."

The models that spun, gyrated and hopped about seemed a lot like the ones of last year and the year before that — even though they were billed as all new.

The mock-ups of highly technical equipment appeared to have been put together by a five-year-old with a 10 ton supply of balsa wood.

Granted, this exhibit appealed to people of College Station and Bryan and was a boon to any elementary school teacher, but since when was the budget of the MSC committees allocated for the people of College Station and Bryan?

Granted, the program brings some details of the US's efforts in space to the campus, but does A&M need it year after year after year?

Presently, there are two major spacecraft projects underway; Gemini and Appollo. The basic ideas of these crafts and their missions have been adequately disseminated among students during past years. Why bring back exhibits that continue to give only the basic ideas.

Detailed exhibits are needed to quench the already informed mind of the average college student.

The bright star of displays concerned the life-support pack to be worn by astronauts outside of spacecraft. Yet even this exhibit centered around a rough model constructed from a single block of wood with safety belts attached.

The crowning insult to anyone's intelligence was on the second floor. It consisted of a 12 foot tall cylinder with a viewing plate in the side. The immensity of the 'white elephant' suggested that a detailed movie might be visible inside.

What greeted the inquisitive person's eyes? An alternating scene depicting man on the moon and Columbus on the deck of his ship while a tape mumbled in the background about why we are going to the moon.

Plans were discussed last year about the possibility of bringing the program back every two or three years because even the students in charge were beginning to see the repetition.

These plans should have been put into action.

Why the student body of A&M should be made to suffer with this second rate catch-all cluttering their "living room" every year is hard to tell.

Tech Law School Suffers Blow As House Committee Denies Aid

AUSTIN (AP) — The House Appropriations Committee put a lid on creation of new law schools with a provision in the 1966-67 appropriations bill voted to the floor Monday.

The bill stipulates that no faculty salary appropriations for 1966-67 can be spent for law faculty salaries in schools or colleges of law not in existence by Feb. 1, 1965.

Texas Tech has won approval of the Commission on Higher Education to establish a law school by 1967. Neither the House committee nor the Legislative Budget Board gave Tech money to finance preliminary expenses for the law school. The budget board's recommendations formed the foundation for the appropriations bill.

The House committee retained a $150,000 appropriation to Tech to study creation of dentistry and medical schools, and added $50,000 for a continuation of the state parks study and research in Texas history.

Sound Off

Editor,

The Battalion:

Seeing no response to my first letter, I again would like to ask — why isn't our system of registering for classes designed to permit the student to know who is teaching a particular course and allow him to choose the course with the professor he desires?

Certainly this would be in accordance with academic excellence.

David W. Miller, '66

Editor,

The Battalion:

Last Tuesday night's basketball game with Texas Tech was a classic example of the fighting Texas Aggie Spirit exhibited by our great team as well as those present to witness the contest.

But why weren't more Aggies out supporting the team? Why were the entrances to the coliseum clogged soon after the Aggies made their tremendous comeback in the second half? These Aggies must have been listening to the game or they wouldn't have known to come and support the team when the game turned in the Aggie direction.

Can they say that they were studying and listening to the game at the same time? I don't think so. The main reason for this is lack of willingness and spirit. In fact, I heard several Aggies say they weren't coming to the game because of the loss to Texas which lowered our chances of winning the conference. And then some talk about the great stamina and "never-give-up" attitude of Aggies. So Aggies, for spirit's sake support our basketball team all the way even if our chances for winning the conference are low. We shall not give up!
