GLENN DROMGOOLE

L. C. Post of San Bernardino, Calif., is concerned that A&M Consolidated has dropped turnip greens from the cafeteria menu.

After reading a brief article about the greenless menu, Mr. Post jotted down a few notes and sent them to his son-in-law who forwarded them to The Battalion. It seems that the California gentleman is quite fond of Texas A&M, having visited his daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Case, here in 1951.

Here are his reactions to the absence of turnip greens from a high school diet:

"Shades of the Alamo!"
"The great state of Texas was built by strong and virile men who were raised on turnip greens. Texas was where men were men and women were women who served their men turnip greens and hog jowls."

"Now comes a new breed. Raised on Coke and custards, they have no stomach for foods with vigor and character."

"Soon they will change the 'coffee break' to the 'Metracal break', tea and crumpets for the afternoon pickup."

"How can their athletes win over opponents who eat turnip greens and bacon rind for dessert?"

"Pass the band-aids. My heart is bleeding for A&M."

Thanks for the blood, Mr. Post, but please remember that only the local high school has excluded green from its food coloring. The A&M food service still provides its students with plenty of greens and we have bacon rind quite often for breakfast.

Quote from Allison Sander's Sunday column in the Houston Chronicle: A service station operator has erected a sign — "Get the lead out of your gas."

My roommate, glancing at the remains of a western shirt returned from the college laundry, remarked, "They did pretty good this week. Only busted five out of eight snaps."

In today's swinging society, we no longer have Yes men. We now have Yeah, Yeah, Yeah men.

The collegian deffinishun of administration: That worthless sand-so who has it in for the students and faculty, and who is seeking only personal gain from the job.

An Aggie fish passed Pinkie in the MSC the other day and greeted him with, "Howdy, Loupot."

And speaking of Pinkie, this corner would like to extend its congratulations on his recent 81st birthday. We wish you many more. Gig'em.

Mental Health Plan Clears Texas House

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. John Connally's plan for a community center attack on mental illness and retardation cleared the House Wednesday on a 139-1 vote and went to the Senate.

The House also acted on tuberculosis control, boat safety and malt liquor and ale bills. The liquor bill sparked the day's hottest fight.

Senators, meanwhile, passed 21-5 and sent to the House a bill changing the name of East Texas State College to East Texas State University.

Rep. W. H. Miller of Houston, sponsor of the mental health bill, won a major victory before the measure finally passed. The House voted 96-42 to remove an amendment approved last week that took out of the bill a requirement that the proposed state mental health commissioner be a physician. Miller had strenuously opposed the amendment.

The bill sets up a new Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation, taking over treatment and prevention jobs now held mainly by the State Health Department and the Board for State Hospitals and Special Schools.

A central feature is the measure's authorization of community centers to deal with mental health problems.

Another Connally health proposal, transfer of all tuberculosis treatment and control activities to the State Health Department, won tentative House approval on voice vote. Rep. Menton Hurray of Harlingen sponsor of the Senate-passed measure, said he will seek final vote Thursday.

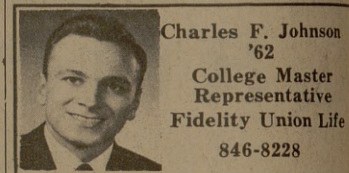

Rep. Gus Mutscher's bill putting malt liquor and ale under the beer action of state liquor law raised tempers and turned faces red.

The bill HB82 was tentatively approved, 89-43, after Mutscher repeated several attempts to water the measure down-including one amendment that would have raised the beer tax $1 a barrel. Another vote is required and could come as early as Thursday.

Malt liquor and ale, slightly more alcoholic than beer, but produced by breweries, is now treated the same as whisky in the Texas Liquor Control Act.

Beer distributors back the bill, while liquor wholesalers and package store operators oppose it. Beer can be sold off the dock at retail and sales to retailers must be cash. Malt liquor and ale would be treated the same way under the bill.

Fight Against Status Quo Is Students' Main Goal

By Intercollegiate Press
San Francisco, Calif. — The college student's quest for the good life stems more from a quiet rebellion against society's values than it does from satisfaction with the status quo, a study of more than 100 freshmen at San Francisco State College suggests.

"That rebellion," he declares, "should take the form of passive disengagement (from society) rather than positive protest indicates that traditional values are not oppressive so much as irrelevant to many students." Mogar believes students may turn to what others have called "an ideology of privacy" to replace the "lapsed ideologies of public action."

In common with many researchers at other colleges, Mogar found the freshmen here tend to "play it cool" and avoid personal entanglement with broad social concerns. Given a choice of 12 items, nearly two-thirds of the men (62 per cent) rated economic security, careers and family life as their three most important concerns after college.
