

CLASS FOR TEACHERS

The 45 high school teachers participating in Texas A&M's eight-week English Institute are introduced to University of Puerto Rico professor Ralph B. Long (right) by A&M professor Harrison E. Hierth. Mornings are devoted to class meetings with afternoons spent in conferences and course research.

Crime Rate Topic Of Short Course

Sixty police officials and youth workers from Texas and other states will participate here in the 8th annual Police and Community Relations Institute Aug. 15-19. Sponsored by the Engineering Extension Service, the institute will feature speakers from law enforcement organizations, educators, churchmen, sociologists, newsmen and public officials.

Frank Day, professor in Michigan State University's School of Police Administration, will give the keynote address on the institute's theme: "Community Indifference and the Growth of Crime."

Wallace D. Beasley, chief of police training at A&M, said Monday's speakers will include Dr. R. Koeninger of Texas Southern University, and Quinn Tamm, executive director of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, Washington, D.C. Koeninger will discuss "A Social Psychologist Looks at the Problems," and Tamm's topic will be "Law Enforcement Takes a Look at the Problem."

Charles F. Pegg, chief of police, East Lansing, Mich., will speak Tuesday on "The Role of Law Enforcement," followed by

Paul O. Cardwell, president of the Texas Council of Churches, Dallas, who will cover "The Role of Religion."

Wednesday's agenda includes "The Role of Education" by James McCrocklin, president, Southwest Texas State Teachers College, San Marcos, and "The Role of Mass Media" by A. C. Green, editorial page editor of the Dallas Times Herald. Mayor Hank Avery Jr. of Midland will speak on "The Role of the Elected Officials."

A summation of the institute will be given Thursday by E. R. McWilliams, director of the National Conference on Christians and Jews, Houston.

Other institute participants include H. D. Bearden, director of the Engineering Extension Service; Charles Batchelor, assistant chief of police in Dallas; Col. W. E. Speir, assistant director of the Texas Department of Public Safety in Austin; Ed Mungovan, chief of police in Morgan City, La.; Howard W. Hoyt, Midwest City, Okla., former professor in the School of Police Administration, MSU; and Willie Bauer, chief of Police in Beaumont.

Cyclotron Expert To Discuss Trip

A Texas A&M physicist just returned from Russia where he lectured at the invitation of Soviet scientists will tell an A&M audience of his experiences.

Dr. John A. McIntyre of the Cyclotron Institute will speak at 8 p.m. July 22 in Room 113, Biological Sciences Building.

"Many people have expressed a desire to hear Dr. McIntyre tell of his experiences," C. M. Loyd said in announcing the lecture as an addition to the Summer Science Lectures. Loyd is campus coordinator for National Science Foundation, sponsor of the series.

"Reflections on A Scientist's Visit to Russia" is Dr. McIntyre's topic.

An oil painting, "Sanctuary of Tufa," has been donated for display in the Memorial Student Center.

Wallace Dreyer, former artist for MSC Student Programs and now an artist in residence in Norfolk, Conn., gave the painting to A&M following a two-week exhibit of his work in the MSC.

The native of Marlin's painting will hang near the south entrance to the MSC Main Lounge.

Plans for 60 reserve officers from the Navy, Army and Air Force to attend a two-week seminar on electronic computers have been announced. The seminar begins Aug. 30.

The Office of Naval Research sponsors the program with Texas A&M and Naval Reserve Research Company 8-3 as local sponsors for the third year.

The seminar provides an elementary descriptive approach to electronic computer programming and uses. The reserve officers from across the nation will hear talks by A&M faculty and leaders from industry and NASA's Manned Spacecraft Center, Houston. The officers also will have 16 hours of workshop and program writing at A&M's Data Processing Center.

The president of the nation's newest chapter of Gamma Sigma Delta is Dr. R. C. Potts, assistant director of agricultural instruction at Texas A&M.

Potts was named to the post July 1 during ceremonies in which Texas A&M became the 28th educational institution to establish a chapter. International officers representing other leading universities were on hand for the installation.

Gamma Sigma Delta is the international honor society of agriculture. Its purpose is to encourage excellence in all phases of agricultural education and research.

Two new instructors have joined the Civil Defense training staff of the Engineering Extension Service.

They are Gus F. White, formerly with the Texas Department of Health, and Lawrence D. Fisher, recently discharged from the Army. He has been chemical, biological and radiological officer at Ft. Bliss in El Paso.

White will direct the conference program for public officials and teach the new Civil Defense Management course, while Fisher will be a radiological monitoring instructor and radiological defense officer.
