Then the solitary blip abruptly swerved and disappeared from the screen, moving at a fantastic rate of speed.

No trace of the pilot or the plane has ever been found.

These are just three out of thousands of unexplained cases which make factual UFO material read like no fiction could ever come close to.

The Air Force's rigorous investigations have adequately explained approximately 80 per cent of what they consider reliable reports. Meteors, weather balloons, stars, optical illusions, and temperature inversions are among the things which have been used to explain sightings.

And like I say, these have served to adequately explain 80 per cent of the sightings. But it's that other 20 per cent that even an experienced and resourceful team of special Air Force investigators can't find a satisfactory answer for that bothers me. That other 20 per cent.

Of course in due time they will be able to explain all these things. Won't they?

Conversational Topics In Europe Surprising

By HERKY KILLINGSWORTH

Somewhere in Europe—Before leaving the sanctity of A&M and venturing across the Atlantic into no man's land, I felt to be a successful conversationalist the traveler had to be a master of all subjects. Without the fundamentals of economics, government, and agriculture the trip would be useless, with Europeans wondering about the mentality of the American student.

As in everything, I received a severe shock to my earlier ideas and found myself most unprepared for the European student's favorite topic — rock-and-roll singers.

It's really amazing. Most 20-year-old Europeans can tell you the year, singer, and circumstance of every popular record in the past ten years. Not only that but they know every singer in America who has ever put out a record, and in this age that itself is a monumental task.

Of course throughout most of Europe the old king Elvis is the greatest. "Don't Be Cruel."

In Copenhagen and Scandinavia there is another singer named P. J. Proby, who is the tops. P. J. hails from Houston, Texas where he couldn't make it until he journeyed to England to entertain their wild ones. He has the "greatest" Texas accent which the Europeans love, and although I can't understand why, he wore such tight pants that they split three successive times on stage, was banned from English TV and stage, and had it so-called made.

Of course the groups are popular over here, with the Rolling Stones and the Beatles leading the pack. A stage performance of a group is really wild. I went to see the Rolling Stones a while back. The girls stood around for two hours before the performance shouting and then fainted when they finally appeared. When the performance was ended the
