The visitor will receive training in corn and sorghum programs, with special attention to male sterile lines.

While on campus, he also will discuss agriculture with Dr. J. D. Gray, director of the A&M Office of International Programs, and with the Department of Plant Science specialists.

Majmudar was awarded a B.S. degree with honors in plant breeding and agronomy from the Agricultural College of Poona. He has worked as assistant maize breeder, Coordinated Maize Breeding Scheme, in Ghodra, India.

His five-month trip in this country is sponsored by the U.S. Agency for International Development.

Bandsmen Begin Exes Association

The 70-year-old Texas Aggie Band started some backing of its own Saturday.

A reunion of band exes attended by 1,000 former students and their families initiated organization of an Association of Former Band Members.

A committee was appointed to study ways and means of forming the Association. The bands director, Lt. Col. E. V. Adams, and consolidated band commander Cecil Windsor of Yoakum were appointed to the group by master of ceremonies Tom Murrah of San Antonio.

Murrah and attorney Searcy Bracewell of Houston, Dr. Martin McBride of the College of Veterinary Medicine, and former bandsmen Cecil Steward and John West, both of Bryan, are other committeemen.

A luncheon-business meeting was held in Duncan Dining Hall. The 251-man Aggie Band, which saluted the exes at halftime of the A&M-SMU football game, attended the reunion.

Guy J. Fernandez, class of 1956, came from Lima, Peru, to attend the event. Band exes also came from California, Virginia, Nebraska, Louisiana, New Mexico and Oklahoma for the reunion.

Prof Says Material Stress Causes Unrewarding Life

Professor Alan Stacell said Monday night life will not be worth living for a man who bases his whole existence upon material things.

"When you depend upon something outside of yourself for your success, you end up losing part of yourself and your self value," Stacell told a "Last Lecture" audience.

He told his audience that total dependence on something for the sake of itself is known as "alienation."

"An example can be found in our society, where a job will dictate how a man dresses, how often he gets a new car and even where he will attend church," the professor explained.

Stacell said the man becomes so dependent upon the job that it "becomes a monster that manipulates his life like a puppet.

"Idolatry created by advertising agencies forces up to want things we really don't need, and at times possession of something will seem more desirable than actually owning it," he said.

The architecture professor termed a man alienated as being one "who prefers daydreams to anything else. He wishes for so many things that one day he discovers he can never have

TTA Plane Slides Off Slick Runway

A Trans-Texas Airlines plane with seven passengers and three crewmen aboard slid off the Easterwood Airport runway Monday afternoon. There were no injuries.

The flight was No. 476, which originated in Houston.

Capt. Lee Cox brought the Convair 240 to a halt after slick runways sent the craft sliding into the mud at the end of the runway.

A TTA spokesman said the mishap was caused by the failure of an engine to reverse upon landing. All engines must reverse in order for proper braking action.

The passengers continued their flight on another plane flown up from Houston.
