Members of the fledgling Air Service Squadron at Texas A&M 46 years ago wouldn't recognize the Air Force ROTC program today. Everything has changed—except the cadets' love for flying.

A&M was one of the first six colleges to organize Air Corps training units.

Records of the 1920 session when men taught to fly "by the seat of their pants" are sketchy. This much is certain: the Aggies' gusto for flying more than compensated for the crudeness of their open-cockpit, fabric and wood airships.

AFROTC at A&M has changed a great deal since the general was a cadet. The 1,000 air cadets study management, communication, world and military history and decision-making in lieu of airframe assembly and hand-bombing techniques. Many of the cadets receive Air Force assistance to meet college expenses.

MAJOR STUDIES COMPUTERS

Campus Briefs

3 Faculty Members Named To Committee

Three faculty members have been appointed to the Research Advisory Committee of the Coordinating Board of the Texas College and University System. They are John P. Doyle, MacDonald Chair Professor, Texas Transportation Institute; Dr. H. O. Hartley, director, Graduate Institute of Statistics; and Dr. Charles Samson, head of the Department of Civil Engineering.

The 25-member committee represents public and private universities and colleges, business and industry, and nonprofit research foundations. It will meet in Austin today.

The committee is charged with bringing about a higher level of research activity in Texas.

Forty-five per cent of the population is either under 18 or over 65 years of age.

Argentine Officer Studies A&M Computer Management

A major in the Argentine Army is in the midst of an accelerated year-long study of computer management at the Data Processing Center.

Carlos Lopez is on special assignment to learn organization and operation of a data processing center, plus the language of computers.

"I'm especially interested in the magnetic tape used in computers at A&M," Lopez commented. "It is very fast and economical."

"We are very proud and pleased with the progress he is making," he remarked. "It is easy to see why his army is willing to invest the time and funds necessary for his training. We are certain he will go away a good Aggie and carry the name proudly.

"The Argentine Army will have to obtain larger equipment to do the job it desires," Smith added. "They will probably get an IBM 360 equipped with magnetic tape, discs and other more modern features. It appears the army will skip three or four generations of computers, spanning the years in one leap rather than the slow, evolutionary process."

Lopez noted the Argentine Army began using computers in 1961 to provide solutions for geodetic problems.
