Jarrin' John Kimbrough
Stars In Western Movie

By MIKE BERRY
 Battalion Staff Writer
 The excitement at the old Kirby Theater in Houston the night of Dec. 2, 1941, was of a specially exhilarating brand — the kind that accompanies the premier of a long awaited picture.
 The leading man was John Kimbrough.
 "Jarrin' John" or "Big John", one of the greatest backs to come from the Southwest Conference, had helped Coach Homer Norton's Aggie team to a national championship in 1939 and won a place on the All-America teams of 1939 and 1940.
 He had now set out to conquer Hollywood.
 The theater was filled to capacity with the fans who had come to see their hero. A review in

The Battalion described the scene.
 "Humanity poured through the doors until officials were forced to hang out the "standing room only" sign. Unusual but not unexpected was the fact that a great number of the audience were boys and girls of high school age. However, the audience was composed mainly of sports addicts."
 The fans had come to see Kim-brough perform as a cowboy turned Texas Ranger in Zane Grey's "The Lone Star Ranger."

 "Those same fans gave 'Big John' a big hand when he made his personal appearance on the stage before the show started. Proof of John's ability to act was offered when he took the master of ceremony duties when that gentleman fumbled his lines," The Battalion reported.

The movie itself would have been disappointing — if it had been taken seriously — but it wasn't. The presence of everybody's All-America was enough to make even a grade B picture palatable.

The errors in the film were patently obvious: the conflicting time element, a line of telephone poles in a scene of the Badlands in 1830, and the improbable occurrence of John and his leading lady, Sheila Ryan, being thrown into a river, emerging soaking wet, and then having Kimbrough appear in a dry, freshly pressed outfit a minute later.

"But," concluded The Battalion, "for all the handicaps, including a weak cast to support him, Kimbrough does give a creditable performance. True, he gives some of his lines as though he was reading them to a six-year-old child, but there are flashes of acting ability which seem to indicate that better treatment in later productions will erase the amateurish taste of his first year."

But there was no later productions. "The Lone Star Ranger" was the final, curious footnote to John Kimbrough's public career.

Officials To Attend
Civil Defense Meet

Five officials from Brazos County will attend the sixth annual state conference for civil defense directors in Austin Monday and Tuesday.
 County Judge W. C. Davis, county Civil Defense Director Jake Canglose, College Station City Manager Ran Boswell, College Station and Texas A&M CD Director John W. Hill and Henry Almsmeyer Sr., civil defense administrator, will attend the Texas State Office of Defense and Disaster Relief meeting.
 Gen. Earle G. Wheeler, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, will conduct the first session, discussing "An Estimate of The World Situation."
 Other sessions will approach civil defense from various angles, including the program from a city manager's and county judge's viewpoint.

Training Expert
Says Craftsmen
Badly Needed

Skilled craftsmen without college degrees are missing good teaching opportunities in Texas schools, a teacher-training expert has revealed.
 "Last year, Texas schools could not meet demands for courses in vocational industrial education," B. M. Hackney, head of the A&M Engineering Extension Service Teacher Training Division, said.
 "One of many reasons for this shortcoming," Hackney noted, "is due to lack of qualified craftsmen entering teaching. Many craftsmen who would like to teach are unaware that they may be qualified already."
 Hackney cited these qualifications for vocational industrial teacher trainers: high school graduates with two years post-high school education — plus five years full-time working experience in the vocation he will teach, or a college degree and three years experiences in the field he will teach.
 "After the craftsman has taught a year in VI programs," Hackney continued, "He must take 12 college hours of teacher training."
 The teacher trainer emphasized the mushrooming need for teachers.

"School officials will be looking for craftsmen in July and August to teach auto mechanics, refrigeration, machine shop operation, carpentry, electricity, cosmetology, radio and television servicing, sheet metal, drafting, welding, auto painting and body repair, and mill cabinet making," Hackney said.

Oceanography Grant
Renewed By NSF

A $38,800 National Science Foundation grant renewal to Texas A&M oceanographers for productivity research in the Antarctic Ocean has been announced by Dr. S. Z. El-Sayed.
 The extension sends research projects by El-Sayed and Lela Jeffrey, now on a cruise in the Drake Passage, into its fifth year. El-Sayed and Jeffrey are in the Department of Oceanography and Meteorology.
 Renewal of the grant also expands his research. El-Sayed's studies now will encompass phytoplankton and zooplankton. Previous work in the sea off Antarctica between Chile and New Zealand has been completed. He said research has begun in the Pacific sector of the Antarctic.
 The $38,800 grant is in addition to $39,300 announced in April, 1965, bringing the total for the two-year period to $78,100.
 Miss Jeffrey studies organic compounds of seawater.
