

Latin American Expert Says Revolts Caused By Poor Power Structure

A visiting Danforth lecturer singled out Thursday the unbalanced power structure as the main cause of revolution in Latin America.

In the area of socio-economic change, Chaves sees two objectives: the improvement of living conditions and achieving of a "better, democratic way of life."

Another major problem is education. "Literacy is increasing in proportional numbers, but illiteracy is increasing in absolute numbers," he noted.

However, the immediate and dangerous problem of political unrest persists. Chaves saw a cycle of "oligarchical rule, popular revolt, military dictatorship, and again, oligarchical rule" as the basis of Latin America's political instability.

Hannigan Says Religious Week De-emphasized

This year four speakers will be spread over four months to gain greater variety and interest. Reagan V. Brown, extension sociologist for the Agricultural Extension Service, will be the February speaker.

Religious Emphasis week had previously been moved off campus in 1963 and met only moderate success in local churches.

"But we are making progress," he continued. "We are beginning to achieve an advanced integration—with the Free Trade Zone, the Inter-American Bank, and the Central American Common Market. We are very optimistic about union."

Continuing on the changing relationship of the United States to Latin America, Chaves said he had believed intervention had been eliminated from the Western Hemisphere because it had never accomplished its objectives.

"However, with the U. S. commitment against Communism, (in the Dominican Republic) intervention is justified if the danger of Communism is genuine," he said.

Chaves received his undergraduate education at Columbia University in law and political science and is currently on assignment with the United Nations in New York representing his native country of Colombia.

He will speak on "Latin America, The New Frontier" at 8 p.m. Friday in the Chemistry Building lecture room.

AF Official Urges Cadet Improvement

Dr. Theodore C. Marrs, member of the Air Force Secretariat, and Deputy for Reserve and ROTC Affairs, challenged Air Force ROTC seniors Thursday night to improve, strengthen and honor their future in the Air Force, Thursday night.

Marrs spoke at the senior "dining in" ceremony at the Briarcrest Country Club.

He began by toasting Maj. Gen. John Doyle (USAF Ret.), Texas A&M President Earl Rudder and Dean of Students James P. Hannigan for their outstanding military careers.

Marrs, also poked fun at his hosts by saying he heard that "anything done twice at A&M becomes a tradition."

"My real purpose in coming to A&M is to pay tribute to the peace marchers," he added wryly.

He quickly added he was greatly impressed by "this magnificent school" and the staff of the Air Force ROTC program.

"There are no more enthusiastic people who seek peace than the military," he said.

Marrs said he has heard much talk about young people of today being soft, but felt that this was not applicable to Texas A&M.

Those in Southeast Asia are courageous, daring, and persevering young men who are fighting in rice paddies," he continued.

Air power is accurate and effective, he added. He emphasized that air flexibility can be attributed to the people using the weapons and not to the actual weapons systems themselves.

Future officers must not only be prepared academically and technically, but must possess imagination, perseverance and guts, Marrs noted.

"Weapons are only as effective as the people using them, but to possess the weapons capable of great destruction and then not to use them is our biggest challenge," he remarked.

Marrs told senior cadets that their military career would represent a barrier between war or comfort for other people.

A military career is not easy, but is demanding, challenging and discouraging, yet always exciting, interesting and a pleasure, he said.

A secret handshake won't help you make V.P. at General Electric.

Something that will help move your career along at a healthy clip is a strong, steady hand when responsibility and important duties are thrust upon you. Plus a firm grip on your special field of interest, whether it's marketing, finance or nuclear physics.

want to strengthen your grip on the subject that interests you. General Electric runs one of the world's largest "graduate schools," with courses in everything from advertising to microelectronics. You can stay on top of developments in your field by periodically going to school at G.E. . . . and learning from G-E

"professors," selected from the country's top ranks of engineering, marketing and manufacturing experts. If you want to work and study and get ahead in this kind of company, this company wants you. Come to General Electric, where the young men are important men.
