ARLINGTON — Three Texans who have distinguished themselves in behalf of higher education in America will be honored with Distinguished Service Medallions at the Golden Anniversary meeting of the Association of Texas Colleges and Universities which opened today in Arlington.

Gov. John Connally and Dr. Logan Wilson, president of the American Council on Education, will receive the medallions in Person. The third medallion, for President Lyndon B. Johnson, will be presented at a later date.

Dr. Frank W. R. Hubert, Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and president of the Association of Texas Colleges and Universities, announced the gifts.

The medallion for Connally, who delivered the keynote address for the conference, is engraved with these words: "John Connally, who through statesmanship and wise governance inspired his state to a dedicated quest for eminence in higher education."

On the medallion for President

Johnson is inscribed: "Lyndon Baines Johnson, brave humanitarian and dedicated servant who attained for his fellow countrymen new hope, dignity, and achievement through education."

The medallion for Wilson, who will speak at the association's Friday banquet, is engraved: "Logan Wilson, untiring exemplar of creative vision and statesmanship in human affairs and higher education."

The medallion presentations, the premiere of the association's new television film, "Investment in Man," and the publication of a status report on higher education in Texas and its future responsibilities are all part of the special commemoration of the association's 50th anniversary.

The planning committee of the anniversary celebration was appointed by Hubert. Chaired by Professor J. P. Abbott of Texas A&M, a past-president of the association, the committee includes the presidents of the 14 charter-member institutions or their representatives.

Psychology Prof Prepares Report On Space Stress

What's the most dangerous job you can think of?

Few would argue if you said it was being an astronaut. When in space their life depends on steady nerves, logical decisions and good judgment.

In space they are constantly alert. If they happen to flip the wrong switch or turn the wrong knob it could be disastrous.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration wanted to know how people were affected by this continual exposure to a stress situation.

Dr. James M. Elliott, professor in the Department of Education and Psychology, was asked to find out what happens to a person under these conditions.

"We were asked to investigate the physiological cost of long term stress conditions," Elliott said.

Invited with Dr. D. E. Sheer and others at NASA for about two years, Elliott commented.

The work, took place at NASA facilities.

questions than it answered and this is possibly as it should be," Elliott said.

However, their study did answer some important questions.

"We found that the cardiovascular system functions at a significantly higher level and there is some indication that the gastrointestinal tract is adversely affected," Elliott said.

The results of part of their work will be presented, in paper form, to the annual meeting of the Southwestern Psychological Association April 21-23.

The paper is titled "Automatic By-products of Avoidance Conditioning in Humans."

Students Testing For Food Services

Board students unknowingly test tables and chairs for the Food Services Department.

Fred W. Dollar, director of Food Services, reported his department has been testing several tables and chairs under actions.

Tables and chairs are being tested for durability, ease of use and attractiveness.

All of the tables are of different styles.

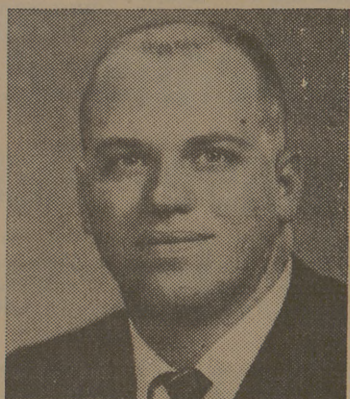

Some are low and some are high. Most are of different styles.

One style meets the needs of the proposed cash line cafeteria.

This summer Dollar is dining sets are located in the dining hall, and Dollar pointed out that interested students can inspect them to the right of the exit in the basement cafeteria.

The top 11 teams in the event except meats will compete against winners from other areas in the state contest here May 14.
