

Byers Named To NAS Post

Dr. Horace R. Byers, dean of the College of Geosciences, has been elected chairman of the Geophysics Section of the National Academy of Sciences. The meteorologist was named to the 750-member organization of the nation's scientific elite in 1953. He is one of three academy members on the teaching staff. The geophysics section includes 35 scientists. Byers came to A&M in September from the University of Chicago. He is the first dean of the new geosciences college which involves A&M's earth sciences. The MIT graduate is best known for research on thunderstorms and directs the U. S. Government's thunderstorm studies.

English Society Inducts Members

Sigma Tau Delta, the English honor society, initiated 15 new members and elected next year's officers at a meeting this week. The new members were all selected on the basis of scholarly achievement. The list includes Dr. Harry P. Kroitor, a faculty member, Douglas Bailey, Janet Douglas, Daniel Fischer, Sharon Hall, D'Ann Hearn, Betty Hines, Jan Gannaway, Jan Loveless and Samuel Mackin. Also selected were Carol Roberts, Roy Rodriguez, Antoinette Rundt, Katherine Singer and Donald Sweeney. Jim Baldauf was selected president for next year. Other officers include Dennis Minor, vice president; Jack Mackin, secretary; Janet Douglas, treasurer, and Jan Loveless historian-marshal. Dr. Stanley L. Archer serves as faculty advisor for the group.

Yearbook Uses Prof's Research

Research by Dr. Dale F. Leipper into hurricane effects on ocean water temperature is acknowledged in a recently published national reference work. The Encyclopedia Britannica's 1966 yearbook mentioned two United States oceanographic developments, including Leipper's findings. Data the yearbook recorded shows ocean water was cooled 12½ degrees in an area 50 by 200 miles measured after passage of a hurricane. Leipper's research on Hurricanes Betsy of 1965 and Hilda of 1964 was from the decks of A&M's oceanographic research vessel Alaminos.
