Footballers Hold Drills Despite Wet Grounds

Despite rain and wet grounds, the Texas Aggies through a two-hour spring workout Wednesday. The drill was A&M's 13th of the spring and left the Aggies with only seven more practice sessions to go. Stallings indicated the Aggies will hold their next scrimmage Saturday if the rain, the first which has fallen on a practice day even though the area has been drenched with moisture since the Aggies opened spring drills, stops. The Aggies will not workout today because of wet grounds but will try to conduct their usually two-hour drill Friday. "If we work Friday then I might have a scrimmage Saturday," Stallings explained. "If we do not workout Friday then the Saturday scrimmage will have to be postponed." The coach was pleased with the spirited workout Wednesday, but "thought the team did not improve as much as they did Tuesday." Stallings thought Tuesday's drill was the best of the spring. The Aggies followed the same routine during the workout. For the first half of the training, they worked on fundamentals, and in the second half they "knocked heads" and worked on basic offensive and defensive patterns. Stallings ran the team through the "meat grinder" again, but with one change from previous practices. This time the first offensive Maroon challenged the first defensive Maroon. Other times it had been the first team against the second. The "meat grinder," as the players call it, consists of three offensive men trying to make a first down against three defensive players. If they make the first down, they are the winners, but if they are stopped then the other team wins. "I did this because it provided more competition and with competition the players play harder," Stallings said. "They (the players) really got after it. This is encouraging to the coaches. It shows boys want competition. It shows they have pride." The Aggies hold their spring training in the practice fields behind Kyle Field, except when they scrimmage and then they play on the regular field.

Water Polo Team Enters Tourney

The Texas Aggie Water Polo team will try to make it two championships in a row as they travel to Albuquerque, N. M., to participate in the National AAU meet next week. The Aggies captured the Men's Junior Division Indoor Water Polo Championship last year, but this time they will compete in the senior division. The championships start May 12 and end May 15. Coach Arthur D. Adamson said that there probably will be 12 teams in the meet. He expects the Aggies, the University of New Mexico and Foot Hills College from California will be the only college teams in the meet. The starting lineup consists of Tom Holder, Jim Hooton and Chuck Colhoun at the forward positions; Mike Offner, Jerry Keating and George Staples, playing the back positions; and Gery Desilets will be the goalie. In addition to the American entries, Adamson said both the Canadian National team and the Mexican National team have been invited to the championships.
