$110,000 Grant To Increase Nuclear Reactor Capability

Data now obtained in Texas A&M's nuclear reactor in 40 hours may be collected in four hours by the summer of 1967.

A $110,000 National Science Foundation grant to increase the Nuclear Science Center machine's power tenfold has been announced by President Earl Rudder.

The grant funds the second phase of stepping power from 100 kilowatts to 1,000, noted NSC director Dr. John D. Randall.

Phase I, pool modifications and stainless steel lining, has been completed. Phase II, installation of cooling equipment in a separate building, should be completed by next summer if work begins Jan. 1, Randall said.

"At 1,000 kilowatts, the reactor generates enough heat to service a small city," Dr. Randall remarked.

The new facility will be designed by the NSC staff under project engineer Donald E. Feltz, assistant director. The NSF grant also covers equipment — pumps, piping, cooling tower, heat exchangers, control system and building — for the modification.

Present operation of the reactor will not be interrupted. Tie-in of the completed structure will be accomplished on a weekend when the reactor is idle, Randall indicated.

A dozen campus agencies and departments and 10 other universities use the reactor, located south of Easterwood Field. It has been in operation since 1962.

"The new 1,000 kilowatt power level will make it possible for us to do things faster and more inexpensively, or things not now even possible," Dr. Randall commented.

Professor Appointed To Oak Ridge Post

Dr. M. P. Memon of the Activation Analysis Research Laboratory has been named a visiting scientist at the Oak Ridge, Tenn., National Laboratory.

The assistant professor of chemistry and assistant research chemist will begin the 3-month study in June. His research will involve solid state detectors.
