GRADE POINT GATHERING

Martha and Tommy Casbeer break for a moment before digging into studies. She's an education major and will be an honor graduate Saturday. He's working on a master's in agricultural economics.

Prof To Visit East Berlin On Bat Research Project

Dr. Dildford C. Carter, assistant professor of wildlife science, is going behind the Iron Curtain this summer to study bats.

Carter will visit the Zoologisches Museum der Humboldt in East Berlin in connection with an 8-country research project supported by the National Science Foundation.

Professor W. B. Davis said Carter is searching for information on types of Latin American bats. Davis said the research will aid in finding valid names for types of bats. Several independent researchers, he explained, have collected Latin American bats and given names to the species. The result is several names for a single species.

Other stops are scheduled in Germany, England, Denmark, Belgium, France, Holland, Spain and Sweden.

The study is being made as a portion of a three-year $35,000 NSF grant.

Harris To Present Paper At Meeting

W. B. Harris, associate professor of chemical engineering, will present a paper and appear on two panels at the Tri-States Oil Mill Superintendents' Association meeting June 12.

The associate research engineer for the Cottonseed Products Research Laboratory will discuss "Aeration" at the Biloxi, Miss. seminar.

Couple Combine Grades, Marriage

Scholarship and housekeeping are homogenous at Texas A&M, where married life and studying is a combination on the increase.

Tommy and Martha Casbeer of Lampasas, agricultural economics graduate and education major, respectively, are typical.

Tom is finishing his first year on a master's degree, requiring 2.25 grade point ratio work. Martha graduates with honors Saturday, posting an overall 2.6 GPR. She is one of six liberal arts students to receive Faculty Achievement awards.

A close schedule and only occasional entertainment break the routine in the Casbeer household. Tom and Martha leave their College View apartment at 7:30 a.m. and return at 5:30 for supper and relaxation. Studying begins at 8.

WEEKENDS ARE devoted to chores or Lampasas trips and looking after one cow left from Tommy's high school ranching. Football and dance weekends turn the Casbeer's home into a casbah, with Martha's friends from a year at Baylor making the apartment headquarters.

He has worked as a rancher, fence builder, range fire fighter and part-time this year. He goes on a research assistantship in June, and not too soon.

Funds from sale of 100 sheep, some cows and land are almost gone. They planned for four years, but made it in three by crowding in a year's work in summer school.

"MARTHA IS consistent with 2.5 GPRs," Tommy remarked.

"She's really great. The way she's fed and taken care of me so I can study and makes her grades proves it."

She has never posted less than 2.5. His worst semester was a 1.3 freshman spring semester. They married that summer, and his grades rebounded.

The trend holds among the married 30 per cent of A&M's enrollment, according to Bennie Zinn, student affairs director.

"Surveys show married students have higher GPRs than others," he noted.

Housework is simple, according to Tommy.

"I DRY DISHES," he said. Martha does chores on weekends, often taking ironing to Lampasas. She spends 15 minutes each morning picking up.

"I hate to come in to a mess," she offered. Studying adjusts itself. She works at the dining table or living room floor in front of the TV. Tommy is shut in a back room because he likes quiet.

Their A&M future was foreseen. Martha, salutatorian in their high school class of 104, was predicted to be "the first girl to graduate from A&M."

"TOMMY AND I started 'going steady' our high school sophomore year. Everyone knew he was coming to A&M," Martha explained.

Tommy's father, a 1937 A&M graduate, and an uncle, class of '43, helped.

"Dad rocked me to sleep often," Tom recalled, "and he knew only three songs, 'The Spirit of Aggie-land,' 'War Hymn,' and 'The 12th Man.'"
