Breeding Makes Big Switch

FROM THE Sidelines

By Gerald Garcia

Coach Gene Stallings had bad news for Aggie fans during his weekly press conference yesterday.

"After watching films, I think that Texas Tech could be better than Georgia Tech," Stallings said. "They (Texas Tech) have two players that are in the same class as Georgia Tech's Lenny Snow and Kim King, and their defense is better than last year."

Stallings was referring to the Red Raiders' Mike Leinert and John Scovell, halfback and quarterback, respectively. Both could spell trouble for the Aggies' defensive unit.

And hearing Stallings discuss the A&M defense, it sounded as though trouble had already invaded the platoon. "Our defense hasn't come along as much as they should have," the Aggie boss said. "We've got too many inexperienced players, our ends are poor in their containment and George Walker (safety) is out with an ankle injury."

Stallings said the sophomores in the platoon always put out a good effort, but they still have a lot to learn. "Take Aschenbeck (Harvey) — he always puts out good effort, but lack of playing has hurt him," Stallings commented.

Still, Stallings thinks the defensive platoon will come around after more playing experience. He proves this by citing the Lawson Howard case.

"Lawson is probably our best defensive player because he has played defense before and this gives him more knowledge of the game," Stallings explained.

About the Tulane game, Stallings thought the Aggies improved but mistakes proved fatal. Still, he says there is still room for improvement since several sophomores are playing key roles in the Aggie offensive unit.

"In the mistakes we made sophomores were involved in each one," the Aggie mentor said. "These mistakes will be eliminated when they have more playing time."

Who graded well after the Tulane game?"

"All of our offensive line with the exception of one and sophomores Edd Hargett, Tommy Buckman and Aschenbeck," Stallings said. Maurice (Mo) Moorman, the heralded tackle, ranked the highest among the linemen with a rating of 79 per cent. This means that Moorman carried out his assignments well.

The injury bug has also invaded the Aggie camp. Besides Walker and Curington, who has been out since the Georgia Tech contest, A&M has fullbacks Dan Schneider and Ronnie Lindsey, tailback Bill Sallee, linebackers Robert Cortez and Billy Hobbs and fullback-middle guard Ken Caffey on the casualty list. Only Walker and Curington are definitely out of the Texas Tech game; the others are doubtful.

Most Aggie fans were probably surprised when they heard the Aggies pass 35 times, but Stallings explained this was in the game plan.

"Why shouldn't it be?" he asked. "We've got receivers in Tommy Maxwell and Larry Lee and a good passer in Hargett, and you can't gripe too much when you complete 21 out of 35 attempts. That's good passing."

Even though A&M lost to Tulane, Stallings had a broad smile on his face during the conference. Finally he was asked if that's the way he felt and he replied:

"I might be laughing outside, but I am bleeding inside."

Ed Breeding, two-year letterman, made a big switch last week that already shows signs of helping the Aggies improve their 1966 football season.

After the Aggies' opening loss to Georgia Tech (38-3) Coach Gene Stallings made several lineup and position changes. In one change Breeding was moved from his old strong end post to weak side tackle. Although the Aggies lost their outing with Tulane last Saturday, 21-13, Breeding showed real promise at his new location.

The 6-4 senior made the change from his position of glory to the less glamorous tackle in five days with no complaints. "I realize adjustments had to be made," Breeding explained. "As long as I can play for A&M I'll play anywhere."

He's not in the spotlight, but a member of the very necessary front wall that allowed quarterback Edd Hargett to set a school record for pass completions. Breeding and his determined teammates shielded Hargett from a tough Tulane defense and permitted him to throw 35 passes with 21 completions.

A&M's two losses are in the past as far as Breeding is concerned. He looks toward the Aggies' game with Texas Tech knowing A&M has the potential to win—and the confidence they will.

"To win the conference you have to win them all and this is the first one," he said.

Breeding feels Stallings will be the key to an Aggie win as he expressed a little personal admiration for the Aggie head man. "I think he is a great person," said the 217 pound tackle. "He has the ability to field great teams no matter what kind of material he has."

The Aggies recruited this prize footballer from Jacksboro High where he was an all-district and all-state end. He also gained recognition as a basketball player after being named an honorable mention all-state basketball player. Breeding fairs well in all sports, but his first love is football.

In the classroom Breeding works just as hard. He has nearly completed work for his bachelor's degree in industrial distribution.

By Saturday night the Aggies should have all the kinks rolled out after their position adjustments. Added to a home crowd at Kyle Field A&M could well snap its two-game losing streak.
