Top A&M Scorer Wants TCU

Ronnie Lindsey, a big strapping guy from Hallettsville, Tex., is Texas A&M's leading scorer for the 1966 season with two touchdowns and he'd like to add to this week when he runs against the Frogs from TCU.

Lindsey, who has weighed between 200 and 205 ever since his junior year, in high school actually isn't a glory hog but he wants the Aggies to post some points. His two touchdowns this year — one against Tulane and one against Texas Tech—are his only points as a varsity player and he's a senior.

A halfback in high school and during his freshman and sophomore seasons at A&M, Ronnie was moved to fullback when Gene Stallings took over the Aggie coaching reins. "I like fullback better," Ronnie says. "I think I'm just better suited for that position."

Prior to last season, Lindsey broke a small bone in his right foot and got a late start. He saw limited duty, some even at tackle, in a season that was almost frustrating for him. He was playing strange places because the Aggies were searching for bodies to fill positions last year.

When spring practice rolled around, Ronnie soon made his presence felt at fullback. He improved tremendously and this fall he and Dan Schneider waged a see-saw battle for starting honors. Ironically, last week at LSU, both had gimpy legs and erstwhile halfback Bill Sallee started at fullback.

Ronnie was a 10-second dash man in the 100 at Hallettsville High and ran on the 440 relay team. The broken foot and hurt leg may have slowed him a little but if he hits daylight against TCU he could go all the way.

Lindsey is one of several Aggie gridders who is in the military corps. He is executive officer of Co. H-1. "When I came to A&M I figured I would have to enter military service in four or five years and I decided I wanted to go in as an officer."

Ronnie played in the high school all-star game after his senior season in high school and he was a regular halfback on the A&M Fish team of 1963. He broke loose for the touchdown that beat Texas, 7-0, in Austin that year. Then his next touchdown came against Tulane this season.

It was a long dry spell in the scoring department, but then not many Aggie backs scored the past several years.

This year, after four games, A&M has tallied 58 points and Ronnie is the only player with two touchdowns.

He doesn't really care who gets the touchdowns Saturday night, just so the Aggies put enough points on the scoreboard to beat TCU.
