A&M Gets $50,000 Grant For Oceanographic Work

Texas A&M University has been awarded a $50,000 NASA grant to probe the ocean's secrets from the air lanes and outer space.

The one-year award is for an investigation to determine how oceanographic research can be conducted from space. Funded by the U. S. Naval Oceanographic Office in conjunction with NASA's Earth Resources Program, the study may continue five years or more.

Miami University and Massachusetts Institute of Technology will conduct related research in the Gulf.

Dr. Dale Leipper is principal investigator for the A&M project. Dr. Louis Capurro and Dr. Guy A. Franceschini of the staff, and graduate students Don Walsh and Frank Chmelik will collaborate in river-ocean studies.

DR. FRANCESCHINI is working on a plan to detect the ocean's characteristics through openings in cloud formations.

Meteorologists Dr. Vance Moyer, Dr. A. H. Thompson and graduate student James Arnold will study ocean surface temperature patterns as indicated by overlying clouds. Radar, cameras and other remote sensors will register data on water circulation and temperatures.

Project technicians are Mrs. Calvin Boykin Jr. and Mrs. John McGraw.

"One objective is to determine what happens to the Mississippi River water when it enters the Gulf of Mexico. This will be done in part by measuring temperatures with highly sensitive infrared scanners," Dr. Leipper said. "A camera with nine lenses and filters also will be used to record the route of the water."

LEIPPER EXPLAINED that the first year of research will be done primarily aboard a NASA Convair 440 and Lockheed Electra aircraft based in Houston.

"Our plans call for four flights, each of several days duration, in each of the seasons," Leipper said. "The Electra will be one of the best equipped planes ever converted for this type research."

The project is part of the Apollo spacecraft applications program. Gemini photographs also are made available to researchers.

Dr. Leipper discussed some practical applications of the river-ocean project.

"Sometimes the outflowing Mississippi River goes east, other times to the west," he said. "This study may indicate when changes occur and when Gulf currents vary as the river water mixes with sea water. These changes affect fishing, sedimentation and buildup of the delta."

A LONG-RANGE GOAL is prediction of sea temperature differences and how far they extend. Such production would have application, for example, to fisheries problems.

Leipper pointed to other practical earth studies from outer space in such fields as geology, agriculture and forestry.

The oceanographer emphasized the need for knowing the situation on the surface for comparative indications of the same events from the air. In an initial research flight by Walsh, A&M graduate student Don Durham checked ocean temperatures from a boat and relayed the information by radio.

Tentative plans call for installing instrumentation for oceanographic studies aboard Apollo spacecraft in the summer of 1968.

Engineering Exam Set In December

The Texas A&M Chapter of the Texas Society of Professional Engineers, in cooperation with Tau Beta Pi and the College of Engineering here, is assisting students in making proper preparation for the Engineering-In-Training Examination, according to J. G. McGuire, assistant dean of engineering.

The examination will be held Saturday, Dec. 3 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. in room 301 of the Engineering Building, and will be open to engineering B.S. degree candidates in January 1967.

Those graduating in May or August 1967 may take the examination April 22 but not the one to be given in December, McGuire added.

STUDENT HAVE BEEN requested to mail their applications and fees of $3 for B. S. candidates directly to Col. Thomas Green's office. Deadline for the applications to arrive in his office is Nov. 21.

Application forms and brochures are available at the respective department heads' offices, McGuire said.

"Students who plan to register by examination should make a thorough review as preparation," McGuire noted.

Nine review sessions have been scheduled to prepare candidates for the test. All the meetings will be in room 228 of the Chemistry Building at 7:30 p.m.

McGUIRE RELEASED the following schedule of review sessions, including teachers and subjects to be covered: Nov. 2 — mathematics, James M. Nash; physics, Dr. R. G. Cochran. Nov. 9 — chemistry, Dr. C. D. Holland; electrical engineering, John S. Denison. Nov. 11 — mechanics (statics and dynamics), Dr. Thomas J. Kozik. Nov. 16 — strength of materials, Dr. Charles H. Samson; fluid mechanics, W. I. Truettner. Nov. 30 — thermodynamics, Dr. Clifford M. Simmang; engineering economics, Dr. A. W. Wortham.

McGuire said additional information could be obtained from him or from department heads concerned.
