Administrators To Represent A&M Council

Two members of the A&M Council on Teacher Education will attend annual meetings in Atlantic City and Chicago next week.

Dr. Earl H. Knebel will represent Council Coordinator Dr. Chris Groneman at the 19th convention of the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education in Chicago Feb. 15-18. The Agricultural Education Department head and Dr. Paul Hensarling, Education and Psychology Department head, will attend.

Dr. Hensarling will participate in the Feb. 11-15 annual American Association of School Administrators meeting in Atlantic City before going to Chicago. The Convention Hall - headquartered conference expecting more than 20,000 school administrators and education professors is Hensarling's 15th.

Dr. Knebel, the designated A&M council representative, also will serve as an American Vocational Association committeeman in an accreditation meeting.

AACTE conference participants will glean suggestions in creativity, innovation and new programs to improve quality of teacher, administrator, supervisor and counselor training. "Changing Dimensions of Higher Education" will be studied.

Dr. Hensarling also will visit several colleges and university campuses on the trip.

Leading Librarian To Lecture Here

A leader among academic librarians in the United States, Dr. William S. Dix, will present a University Lecture Wednesday at Texas A&M University.

Dr. Wayne C. Hall, A&M's academic vice president, said Dr. Dix's address, "New Challenges to University Libraries", is set for 8 p.m. in the Memorial Student Center Ballroom.

"Since becoming director of the University Library at Princeton in 1958, Dr. Dix has brought that collection to a position of eminence among the outstanding academic libraries in the world," Dr. Hall remarked. "He is particularly familiar with the problems of growth facing university librarians who attempt to serve the needs of an ever-increasing number of faculty and student researchers."

AT PRINCETON, Dr. Dix has chaired the Faculty Committee on the Library, and has served on trustee committees on the library and curriculum.

He is a former chairman of the Committee on Intellectual Freedom of the American Library Association and its International Relations Board. He is a member of the executive board of the Association of College and Reference Libraries, executive board of the New Jersey Library Association, Academic Freedom Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union, Modern Language Association and Phi Beta Kappa.

Before moving to Princeton, Dr. Dix was librarian at Rice for eight years. His experience includes teaching posts at Harvard University, Williams College, Western Reserve University, and Darlington School for Boys.

DIX EARNED A.B. and A.M. degrees from the University of Virginia and added the Ph.D. in American Literature at the University of Chicago.

In 1960, President Eisenhower appointed Dr. Dix to the U. S. delegation to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. Dix served as delegation vice chairman at a session in Paris.

Earlier, Dr. Dix chaired the U. S. National Commission for UNESCO after appointment to the body by the late secretary of State John Foster Dulles to represent the American Library Association.

Dr. Dix is an editor of "Good Reading", a guide to reading published by the New American Library, and has written for numerous professional library publications.

At The Movies

with Bob Borders

It's hard to tell whether "Kiss the Girls and Make Them Die" is a satire of the secret agent movie proves to be fast-paced, action-packed, and unclichéd, despite these clichéd adjectives.

Michael Connors is a suave American agent who comes up against Dorothy Provine, who turns out to be a British agent. Since they're on the same side, at least most of the time, Connors proposes to join forces. Yes, dirty-minded reader, that's not all he proposes.

During the movie Connors has this thing about bananas. He eats them constantly, and even uses a peel as a weapon once. If anyone can figure out the symbolism in this, please let us know. It must mean something.

THE VILLIAN they're both after is played by Raf Vallone. They're not sure what he's up to, but they know it's no good.

He has many girl friends, and one by one they disappear mysteriously. Actually they're being incarcerated in giant plastic cubes for resurrection at some later date. They really know he's up to no good when they stumble upon one of his no-good experiments in the jungles of Brazil.

A group of Indians is performing fertility rites, and upon being questioned, they tell the agents that there has not been a child born in the tribe for four years. The women are doing their best, but all the men seem to want to do is sit around.

JUST THEN Miss Provine gets herself kidnapped by the bad guys, and her captors lead Connors to the underground bad guy headquarters.

Finally we learn of the dastardly plan of the villain. He is about to send up a rocket which emits radioactive rays as it orbits the earth, with the purpose of eliminating the world's sexual appetite, except for himself and his suspended cuties.

We now pause for a few seconds of contemplation on the implications of this scheme. Will Connors get there just in the nick of time? Will he rescue the very rescuable Dorothy Provine? Will they live happily ever after? What do you think?

ART IT'S NOT. Good entertainment it is. One of the better parts of the movie was Terry-Thomas' portrayal, first of a jungle explorer and anthropologist, and later of Miss Provine's chauffeur.

It's hard to tell whether the role was suited to Terry-Thomas, or he just does well in any role he takes.

Regardless, he is perfect as the self-sufficient chauffeur and Miss Provine's protector.

REFUSING to be ruffled, he quickly disposes of five ruffians whose intent is bodily harm.

The only time he appears to be disturbed during the entire movie is when Connors asks for Scotch but instead receives Bourbon from the Rolls Royce's automatic bartender.

The important thing, and the thing everybody has been waiting for, of course, is the verdict. After all, this is a very important decision. It could mean a couple of hours and a dollar to many fun-seeking Aggies.

In the light of this, and after careful deliberation, the movie is recommended. Oh, these decisions.
