

Welcome To Aggieland Career Day Visitors

Everyone in Aggieland wishes to extend a personal "Howdy" to the more than 3,500 students and other visitors getting a first hand look at A&M during its Career Day.

We hope you will take this opportunity to gain an insight into the facilities, the courses and our distinctive student life. But above all, we hope you will leave A&M with a little bit of what really makes an Aggie — that Fightin' Texas Aggie Spirit.

You will soon be deciding where to spend the next four years, and which institution you will look gack upon and call your own for the rest of your life. If you are thinking seriously along these lines — making your decision from considering the end result of four year's effort — you may well decide on A&M.

For those willing to pay the price — four years of hard work — it has a lot to offer, including a highly respected scholastic standing at a relatively low cost.

While visiting our campus, take a long, hard look at Aggieland, yourself and the future.

Aggie Players Schedule Ten Plays This Spring

The Aggie Players have scheduled 10 plays to be produced in the Fallout Theater-Workshop during March, April and May.

Each of these plays will be directed by students to fulfill part of their requirements for the Directing II course in Theater Arts.

They will include plays written by such well known authors as Strindberg, Tennessee Williams and Edward Albee. Also produced will be many plays written by the students themselves.

The Fallout Theater-Workshop was conceived and built by students for students. Since its opening in January, 1965, more than 50 plays have been presented to the public. They have ranged from light comedy and melodrama to serious commentary on contemporary society. All aspects of the theater work are performed by students, under the supervision of C. K. Esten, director of the Aggie Players, from the acting and directing, to set design, lighting and sound.

Further announcements of the individual productions will be made as the plays are presented. Admission is 50 cents and show time is 8:00 p.m.

The Bryan-College Station Chamber of Commerce will supply off-campus information at a desk in the coliseum lobby. Brochures, community profile, visitors directory and artery maps will provide data on climate, population, local economy and job opportunities, schools and churches.

The Counseling and Testing Center has issued Career Day invitations to county agents and high school counselors. A&M hometown, mothers and county clubs will assist in bringing students to the campus.

Visitors register at White Coliseum, beginning at 7:30 a.m. Saturday, and meet in a general assembly at DeWare Field House at 10:30. Tours of university facilities begin at 1 p.m.

Parents and visitors are invited to participate in the afternoon tours and should feel free to raise any questions concerning the academic life at A&M.

Last year approximately 4,000 students visited the campus for the day's activities.

Johnson Asks Congress To Restore Business Tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Johnson announced Thursday he is asking Congress to restore the 7 per cent tax credit for business investment in new machinery and equipment.

Johnson told a news conference the accelerated depreciation allowance is now "appropriate" in view of the diminished inflationary threat.

Johnson called for the restoration to be made effective today.

His action came just a day after the official forecast of industry's capital spending showed an actual decline—the first in four years.

Johnson said in suspending the tax credit last fall he provided for automatic restoration under certain conditions.

He said it is now clear the temporary suspension has "done the job we hoped and expected it would do."

He said interest rates have declined during the suspension, as much as one and one-quarter percentage points.

He said last spring and summer savings and loan institutions had virtually no money for new home building, but again have money to lend now.

He said the pressure on machine industry had eased dramatically.

"The imbalance in our economy that we were aiming at has been righted. The suspension is no longer needed and I propose that we restore the investment incentives effective today," he concluded.

Johnson said he expects to meet somewhere in the Pacific later this month with his top leaders in Vietnam.

Johnson did say at one point without mentioning names that "it seems obvious to me that some of them do need more information."

But he also declared that, "I must grant to them the same sincerity I reserve for myself."

"All of us," he said, "are very anxious to seek a peaceful settlement in Vietnam—as far as I am concerned, the sooner the better."

Cockroaches Aid Mental Research

A Texas A&M physics professor is conducting laboratory research with cockroaches which may lead to new information about certain mental disorders.

Dr. Dayle Sittler is interested in action of chemicals which help transmit neural impulses to the brain. These include adrenalin, nor-adrenalin, acetylcholine and serotonin—collectively called the catecholamines.

Laboratory tests by Dr. Sittler involve the use of American cockroaches about one and one-half inches long for study. He dissects a single clump of nerve tissue from one of two nerve cords in the cockroach.

The clump of tissue is then immersed in a moving saline solution and hooked to electrodes which connect to sensitive measuring devices. Readings are taken to measure the rate of impulse transmissions spontaneously generated by the tissue.

Measured amounts of one or more of the catecholamines are added to the saline solutions. New readings are made to determine whether the injected chemical facilitates or inhibits nervous impulses, and to what extent.

Sittler hopes eventually to correlate the information to rate of transmissions of chemicals which stimulate nervous system responses in humans.

The physicist said scientists have indicated that chemical imbalances are implied in such mental disorders as schizophrenia and hallucinations.

Sittler noted other researchers contend serotonin appears to be involved in the occurrence of hallucinations produced by LSD. He also remarked that LSD, except for bad side effects, is an excellent means of making contact with mentally disturbed brains.

According to Sittler, researchers are seeking more information about serotonin. If they prove the drug produces hallucinations, future research might be conducted which would block or reduce one or more of the undesired side effects.

Cockroaches have been used in laboratory experiments since 1962 by Dr. Sittler, primarily because they can be raised conveniently in the laboratory. He keeps about 1,000 cockroaches for research.
