A&M Is Home Base For New Statistical Association

Texas A&M is the home base of the newly chartered Southeast Texas Chapter of the American Statistical Association.

Dr. H. O. Hartley, director of A&M's Institute of Statistics, said the ASA board of directors granted the new charter during a recent meeting in Washington.

The new chapter was created primarily through efforts of faculty and students of A&M's Institute of Statistics, Hartley noted. Membership includes faculty and students from the Institute of Statistics, and from departments of business, industrial engineering, genetics, economics, agricultural economics and animal science.

Dr. Hartley said the chapter eventually will expend activities to the Southeastern area of Texas and make membership available to non-academic statisticians. Other plans, he noted, include joint activities with the Houston Chapter of the American Society for Quality Control.

President of the 60-member chapter is Dr. J. N. K. Rao, associate professor of statistics. Dr. L. J. Ringer, assistant professor of statistics, is vice president.

Two graduate students in the Institute of Statistics hold leadership positions in the organization. N. A. Hartmann Jr. of Rosenberg is secretary and D. L. Bayless of Hendersonville, N. C. is treasurer.
