'Visiting Engineers' Helpful

A spring semester Engineering Graphics course will give 550 freshmen more intimate contact with the engineering profession through a "Visiting Engineers Program."
Nineteen practicing engineers from Houston, Dallas, Fort Worth, Corpus Christi, Beaumont, Pasadena, Bryan and Bartlesville, Okla., began meetings with sections of Engineering Graphics 106 March 26.

Each engineer will meet with two sections of 30 to 60 students twice during the semester. He will serve as a consultant on four student team projects, answer general problem-solving questions, provide ideas paralleling company operations and methods, hold career orientation discussion, critique and evaluate finished products.

second-semester freshman learning original design development, problem solving principles, importance of oral, graphic and written solution presentation.
"Long-range goals include involving students in projects requiring creativity and innovation and improvement of the engineer's communication process," Earl said. A fall semester visiting engineers program emphasized generalized engineering education. Fall projects included humanities and liberal aspects dealing with social needs.

Rescue Training School Is Now Being Conducted

A heavy duty rescue training school is now being conducted at Texas A&M.

John R. Rauch, instructor for the Firemen's Training Division of the hosting Engineering Extension Service, said 18 men were expected to enroll for the 56-hour school.

Classes are taught at "Disaster City," a unique part of A&M's Firemen's Training Field.

Guest instructors include Theo H. Fields, chief of the Houston-Harris County Civil Defense Rescue Service, Harold R. Sorensen, Brazos County Civil Defense Rescue Service, and Paul Stanforth, a Galveston Fire Department captain.

Winning design problems on a home caddy, drawing table, playground apparatus and a hunting seat will be presented by teams May 10-12 for visiting engineer evaluation.

"The program is designed to give freshmen a better understanding of engineering and its application," noted Dr. James H. Earle, engineering graphics head. "It has several goals."

Immediate goals include the
