Tennis Courts Kept Jumping By Campers

The Texas A&M tennis courts have never been busier than this week as the 143 members of the Texas Tennis Camp have been hard at work on the Aggie courts from 8:15 in the morning until 5:45 in the afternoon.

The ninth edition of the camp, and the seventh to be held at A&M, is under the direction of Clarence Mabry, coach of the Trinity University team and Tut Bartzen, a former top-ranked tennis amateur from Fort Worth.

Twelve leading players and coaches from throughout the state assist the two directors in teaching the youngsters the fine points of the game.

The ages of the campers range from 10 to 18 and include some of the best high school tennis players in the state and out of it. There are members from Colorado, Mississippi, Louisiana and Kansas.

"We've held the camp at A&M for the past seven years," Mabry said, "because we think it's the best possible place in the state. There are plenty of courts for the kids to practice and with these new varsity courts the benefits are even greater."

Mabry said that the whole goal of the camp was to get the students to give 100 per cent effort toward becoming good tennis players.

He said that the ratio between boys and girls attending the camp was about 50-50 with the boys perhaps having a slight edge.

The eight hours a day which the campers spend on the courts is devoted to instruction on each stroke, practice and play. Participants are divided into divisions according to age and ability. There are beginning, intermediate and advanced groups.

Much time is devoted to the basics of tennis as the instructors try to instill in the young players the small points of play which go toward making a good player into a great one.

The coaching staff play matches from time to time in order to demonstrate the correct techniques.

A&M has profited from the camp. Joe Tillerson, a top player on the Aggie varsity squad is an ex-camp member and was picked as ideal camper during his participation in the camp.

The latter part of the camp will include a tournament to determine the best players. Awards will also go to the "most improved" players and a boy and girl "ideal camper" will be chosen.

Social activities during the week have included a dance in the MSC Ballroom last night, and a special Parents' Night is scheduled for Saturday to complete the camp.

A waiting list for the 1968 camp has already been established. This year's camp was booked up three months in advance.

Big Randy Wins Shot And Discus

Randy Matson of Texas A&M turned in dual victories in the shot and discus events last weekend in the NCAA track and field meet in Provo, Utah.

In the shot put ring Friday night Matson set a NCAA meet record with a toss of 67-9/4, over three feet beyond second place finisher, Neal Steinhauer of Oregon, who is considered the second best shot putter in the world and is the only person to beat Matson since the 1964 Olympics. Steinhauer hurled the shot 64-2.

Saturday night, Mighty Matson completed his second double victory in the meet in two years as he sailed the discus 190-4 to claim the discus title.

Last year's winning marks were 67-1/2 and 197-0.

Matson was late in entering the meet and a wire service report caused concern among A&M officials when it blamed Dr. C. H. Groneman, the A&M athletic faculty chairman for the incident.

A&M track coach Charlie Thomas later said he was misinterpreted and misquoted concerning Matson's entry in the track meet.

Thomas said the facts of the matter were:

"I inadvertently failed to get Randy's official entry papers into Athletic Director Barlow Irvin's office on time. At Provo, Utah, an NCAA entrance committee held a special meeting and allowed Matson to enter late since he was defending champion in both the shot and discus.

"I appeared before the committee, apologized for the lateness of the entry and accepted the responsibility for its lateness.

"There were others allowed to enter late, too. However, this was the first time A&M had been involved and I guess we received some bad publicity because Randy is a world champion and his name is news."

The Amateur Athletic Union sanctioned open meet will attract swimmers from the three-region to establish quality times in 15 swimming events and three-meter diving for national championships.
