

Poor Manners

The crowd at the Town Hall performance of trumpeter Al Hirt did not show the performer much Aggie hospitality.

Many students left in the middle of Hirt's spirited playing — and that is something that probably has happened to him very seldom in recent years.

Town Hall presents its second show of the year Friday night and the performers this time will be the Standells. Their show will be quite different from the one given by Al Hirt, and they are probably used to a more active audience than Hirt. But common courtesy should dictate the actions of those who attend the show.

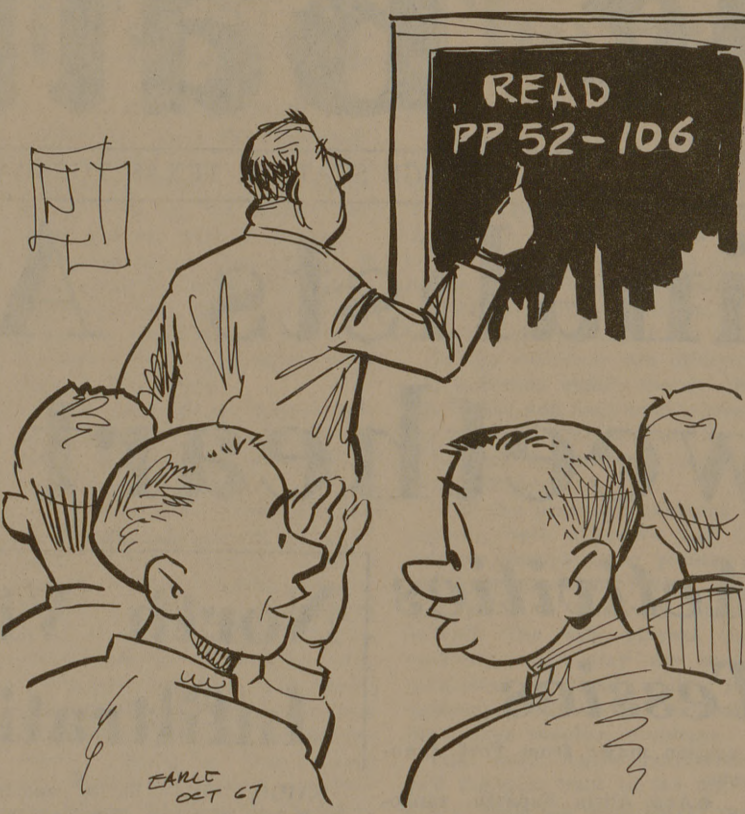

An unruly and rude audience reflects poorly on Texas A&M as a whole, and on the students as individuals. Anyone who feels that for some reason he cannot stay for the whole performance should try to sit near an exit so he can make his departure as inconspicuous as possible.

Poor manners should not become a common occurrence. Let's try to show respect to visitors to Texas A&M.
