Mixed Marriages May Mean Trouble

By JIM BASINGER
 Battalion News Editor

Interfaith marriage problems, which seem trivial at first, might lead to grave consequences for a couple if these problems are not solved at once, D. Lance Bullard said Tuesday night.

Ending the 1968 series of YM-CA marriage forums, Bullard, a sociology instructor, said that while these marriage problems may seem trivial at first, they will certainly get worse before they get better.

He said that "love will find a way . . . you must adapt to each other and have love and understanding."

Interfaith marriages do cause problems, but Bullard added that these problems are not insurmountable.

"People are becoming more heterogeneous . . . we're becoming more urbanized and in doing so the social values tying people together are falling apart." Because of this, Bullard said that interfaith marriage has become more acceptable.

Nearly every college student has attended or attends some sort of religious organization, Bullard said.

"Nearly everyone is affected by religion," he added.

"Everyone is affected by religion, whether they think they are or not," Bullard continued.

"You're a product of religious values, even if you have never gone to church."

However, this religious tendency is weakened with a student's entrance into college, Bullard said.

He added that nearly every college student will attend church less while he is in college than he did in high school.

This temporary loss of religious affiliation seems to cover up problems stemming from basic religious differences between couples, Bullard pointed out.

"You are more likely, as a college student, to marry outside your faith."

Bullard added that once a couple is married, they are struck by reality and these seemingly trivial differences between faiths become more acute.

These religious differences are brought to the surface by the sudden increased religious affiliation experienced by a couple after their college years, Bullard commented.

However, love can help resolve these problems, he noted.

If a couple was really in love when they were married and still in love, Bullard said that marriage problems caused by religious differences can be solved.

Bullard noted that marriages between Catholics and Protestants are the most controversial. Differences between conception and birth control, sterilization and artificial insemination, all of which Catholics oppose, are the source of many problems between the two religious beliefs, he concluded.

However, this religious tenden-

Biosciences Staff Adds 4 Foreigners

The Texas A&M Biochemistry and Biophysics Department has taken on an even wider international flavor with the addition of four new staff members.

They are Dr. Joseph Nagyvary of Hungary, Dr. Roberto Provenzale of Italy, and Bernd-Jergen Henrici and Wolf-Dietrich Krebs of Germany.

The group is fluent in English, but their accents add further variety to an already cosmopolitan atmosphere provided by such earlier staff members as Dr. Nestor R. Bottino of Argentina, Dr. Hava E. Neumann of Israel, Dr. Eberhard Haefner of Germany, Dr. M. Bahi Abou-Donia of Egypt, and Dr. Chandra Sharma, Dr. Amando Rao and Dr. Pullar-kat Raju of India.

Dr. Carl Lyman, head of the Biochemistry and Biophysics Department, said Nagyvary has brought to A&M a new program on the chemistry of nucleic acids (components found in the nucleus of animal and plant cells).

"These chemical substances form the physical basis of genetic inheritance and are undoubtedly related to the origin of life," Lyman said. Dr. Nagyvary and his staff are also synthesizing new drugs for the treatment of cancer and viral diseases."

Krebs, also from Frankfurt, holds a diploma as a druggist but has worked five years in organic synthesis. He is currently researching the polymerization of nucleotides and is in the U. S. as an exchange visitor.

Henrici is from Frankfurt, Germany, and holds a German technical diploma. He worked with the Swiss firm, Ciba Ltd., until 1966 when he came to the U. S. to join Nagyvary's group.

Provenzale was born in Florence, Italy, and received his PhD degree from the University of Florence. He has worked on the synthesis of natural products at the Universities of Milan and Zurich.

The Italian came to the United States in 1967 as a permanent resident.

Henrici is from Frankfurt, Germany, and holds a German technical diploma. He worked with the Swiss firm, Ciba Ltd., until 1966 when he came to the U. S. to join Nagyvary's group.
